Reaching Out to the World

People helping people, enough for everyone, possibilities of a world at peace and free of the choking fumes of technological development that taint our air, water and soil. This is the wish of Paul Pantone, Inventor and CEO, and Molley Feichko, President, of GEET Research, LLC and all the employees working with the company. We believe it is also the dream of every caring person on the Planet. We believe that our children and their children's children have a birth right to a habitable planet. There is a way, there is a possibility.

Cutting the red tape of bureaucracy is the first step in delivering a positive solution to the world. Working together as friends toward a common goal will help us all today and save the world for all of our children tomorrow. We are asking to become citizens of the world. We can work together, unencumbered by race, religion, color, gender, culture or man made boundaries. One goal, to make the air breathable, the water drinkable, and the soil productive. All people, people of the planet working together to make a habitat for humanity and an inheritance for all our children.

The technology that Mr. Pantone has developed is for mankind as a whole. Toxic waste, noxious air and undrinkable water poisons the life forms of this planet indiscriminately and that is how the problem has to be cleaned up.

The nuclear fallout from Chernobyl was charted, graphed and recorded as it made its way around the world. Ignoring man made boundaries and distributing its carcinogenic load over the entire world. The same thing is happening with tons of hydrocarbons and carbon dioxide and other toxic chemicals belching from exhaust pipes and smoke stacks all over the world. Collectively we the citizens of the world have made the mess and collectively we have to clean it up. Paul was asked if he would deal with all countries, he calmly replied, "Of course, as long as one country on this planet is dumping toxic waste into the ecosystem, the ecosystem will continued to be polluted."

Water runs down hill in underground aquifers and in currents in the ocean. Air masses swirl in the jet stream as smog particles collect water droplets and acid rain contaminates virgin forests and urban areas without prejudice or bias. Our pollution is found in the ice of the Southpole, recording our disregard and ignorance of waste management. We are creating chemical concentrations of compounds that do not occur in nature and we have to clean them up or face the dire consequences.

People in Hong Kong, Mexico City, London, Los Angeles, Tokyo and New York are finding the air hard to breath. Bottled water is being purchased by people at the head waters of our municipal water sheds. The time to start the clean up is NOW!

Our technological development has brought us to the verge of self annihilation. But necessity is the mother of invention. The world needs the technology that will wash the taint of our ignorance from the planet. We are here to help start the process. It is not necessary to go back to the horse and buggy, but it is important to reduce our consumption of hydro carbon producing fuels.

Paul Pantone's GEET device lets us have our cake and eat it too. The possibility of using the thousands of gallons of water laden crude oil lakes in Mexico to produce clean electrical energy is but one application of the GEET Fuel Processor's capabilities. Retrofitting thousands of older cars with the device is another step. There is a side effect of the clean up, the tremendous amount of money that will be made in putting this technology on the market. The figure is astronomical. Paul has made a commitment to set aside 25% of all the profits from GEET for the children, the poor and the handicapped in every country for medical support and education. Paul has also made a commitment to set an additional 3% aside for help with natural disasters.

Paul and Molley have spent hours talking about their dream of helping the world, the children and the less fortunate and you, mankind, and our mother earth.

To participate in GEET Research call Paul and Molley at 801-637-2654 (or fax 801-637-3198).

The Drug Trade in America

Under the guise of a war on drugs, Americans have lost many of the freedoms they have taken for granted. In the 1930s, one of America's premier industries, even bigger than cotton, was hemp cultivation. That industry was destroyed by Treasury Secretary, Andrew Mellon and his cohort and relative, Harry Anslinger, the first "Drug Czar".

Was smoking marijuana such a problem that it was necessary to shut down a vibrant, essential and profitable American industry? All of our rope, all of our sails, and many of our flags were made of hemp. Levi Strauss' famous jeans were first sewn from hemp sailcloth. We supplied the world with the sails and rope needed to traverse the mighty oceans. The coming of oil-powered ships signaled the end of free travel over the oceans of the world. The patented process of making cloth from oil (Nylon, rayon, etc.) obtained by DuPont signaled the end of the hemp industry and the demise of thousands of farmers who grew it.

Perhaps it was only a coincidence that Andrew Mellon was also the banker for DuPont, the same sort of coincidence that Freon, another DuPont product, was made illegal as soon as the patent on it ran out. Roosevelt himself admitted that, "In politics, nothing happens by coincidence."

The drug problem in this country is not an accidental occurrence. But for the government to single out marijuana as a culprit just because it can be grown locally is ridiculous. The truth is that aspirin is to blame for more deaths than marijuana.

In the sixties, millions of Americans, high on pot, laughed together at the Late night, underground cinema showings of "Reefer Madness", a government sponsored propaganda film made in the forties. Knowing from personal experience that the government was lying about the detrimental effects of pot, these hippies, yuppies and disenfranchised Vietnam Vets fell easy prey to the lure and easy availability of other, harder drugs like cocaine and heroin, in effect, proving the government's point that experimentation with pot would lead to harder drugs. Not because the use of pot, but because its illegality put Americans into contact with the criminal element who supplied it, and created criminals out of those who cultivated or used it.

The result was a generation whose disgust with the government led to the use of the harder drugs and a disastrous escalation of the so-called "War on Drugs" which propelled America into first place as the country with the most of its population in prisons.

The Vietnam war, under the guise of fighting Communism, helped to spawn the drug culture in America. Ironically, it was a war fought for the control of a major drug producing region. Other, more secret wars, are being fought as we speak, for the control of the sources and production of cocaine in South America. The Medellin Cartel was supposedly wiped out by the "anti-drug forces" in Columbia and Bolivia but it did nothing to cut off the flow of the drug into America. The Medellin Cartel was replaced immediately by the more sophisticated, business-like Cali Cartel and the drugs kept flowing.

According to Lyndon LaRouche in "Dope, Inc." this is merely a centuries old story repeating itself.

China, the prime source of opium, had little or no problem with the drug until England became involved and created a nation of addicts. Hong Kong was set up as a banking enclave to finance and launder the profits of the drug trade. Drug use was started in America when the Chinese coolies were brought over to build Morgan's railroads and through the "legitimate" drug companies through the sale of laudanum, a tincture of opium.

More recently, under George Bush, both as CIA director, VP and President, the drug war took on a new meaning. Instead of stopping the flow, our prime concern became "control".

Kathy O'Brien, a recovering CIA mind-control victim, recalls the message she was used to deliver from George Bush, to then VP of Mexico, Carlos Salinas, "America is willing to share its wealth through a trade agreement with Mexico. We'll trade our cash for control over Mexico's cocaine and heroin production. By controlling your drug industry, we can open the border between our countries to allow a free flow of cocaine and heroin into the US, bought and paid for in American dollars to build Mexico. Eventually this could dissolve the border between our countries altogether as Mexico's economy grows to match ours. If we begin today, this dream could be realized by the turn of the century." ("Trance Formation of America")

The implementation of the "La Paz Agreement (Border Area 21) is the cleaned up version of that covert agreement. The ruling PRI, Mexico's version of the Communist Party, in power for 60 years, has been weakened by the indictment of Carlos Salinas, currently a fugitive from Mexican justice and his brother, but the fact is, the drug trade continues to this day. The international drug trade could easily be linked to both Bush and Clinton, were the Justice Department and the FBI not compromised and controlled.

American patriots who try to point to this and other indelicate matters, risk being accused of violating national security. If the government is as corrupt as that of Mexico and is following Britain's example of worldwide drug distribution, disclosure of the government as the source of our drug supply would certainly be a danger to their security!

You must ask yourself, with all of the tools, spy satellites and the like, why the governments of the world can't find the source of these drugs. Why haven't we napalmed the coca trees in Peru, used a satellite based laser on the poppy fields of Cambodia or bulldozed the marijuana in Mexico? The drug trade could not exist without the cooperation of governments.

We have allowed the men in control of these government to apply a double standard. We have allowed unscrupulous men to pass laws that devastate our families while assuring that a ready supply of illegal substances are made available to the weak, the gullible and the uninformed. We have allowed our government to lie to us with impunity while they gradually eliminate our freedom.

The war on drugs has now escalated to a war on the people. Pockets of resistance to the New World order are ridiculed as they are set up and knocked down. The demonization of the "militia" by the feds and the media is a prelude to the roundup those "kooks" have been warning you about. The only problem is the militia is any American male between 18 and 45, not in the military, who still owns a gun and is potentially capable of fighting the New World Order.

The enemy is no longer Russia or China but the American people who still support their Constitution. John Huang is a new "patriot" of the NWO, not a spy! The Chinese, not the British, now control Hong Kong but it is business as usual with the world drug trade, whose cash flow is second only to oil.

The media has sold out. The grand juries are controlled by the prosecutors. The judges only rule against the unconnected. The line between the good guys and the bad have blurred worse than the Mexican border. We are compromised by their compromises and conned by "consensus" while our sovereignty slips away.

The legalization of the drugs so many lost their freedom over, will follow immediately behind our submersion into the NWO and the elimination of cash as a medium of trade. The cashless society will be a far cry from utopia but you can bet you will still be able to buy your drugs somehow.

Once we are all registered, monitored and tracked, the drug users in our prisons who unwittingly financed the NWO, will be replaced by those who resisted the NWO. Cocaine and heroin users will take their rightful place next to the Valium and prozac addicts in the worldwide workplace. The all encompassing medical/health complex will take care of your every need. . . and make sure you die on time. Can't have a lot of "useless eaters" hanging around, you know. Don't worry, you won't die in pain, Dr. Kervorkian's Death Club will be right around the corner. With no family to care, just the village that raised you, there is really no other choice. But what do you want to bet that marijuana will still be illegal. Unlike tobacco, it is easy to grow, non-toxic and inhibits mind control.

Welcome to the New World Order.

OUR EDITORIAL VIEWPOINT for 1997

The Free American is committed to providing insight into current events. We are against the looting of America by foreign interests and foreign entanglements. Our commitment extends to ALL Americans regardless of race or religion. We refuse to alter history or our reporting of current events to cover for the corrupt, be they Christian, Jew, Muslim, Black, Oriental or Hispanic. A criminal is a criminal, a traitor a traitor regardless of his background, race or religion.

The truth is sometimes difficult to ascertain. Many of our authors have views about history that may conflict with yours. By listening to their arguments, rather than censoring them, you may expand your knowledge of current events and overcome the barrage of propaganda coming from our government.

We intend to expose crime and corruption, Communism and Fractional Banking Scams, so it is necessary to keep a close eye and an open mind when considering current events. Because we print a variety of opinions, this should, in no way, be considered racist or an attempt to label all for the actions of the elite few.

Charges by the media that patriots are anti-government is a blatant lie. We are against "Corrupt" government officials, traitors and government sponsored terrorism.

We will support with our lives, fortunes and our sacred honor the Constitutional Republic to which we swore allegiance, . . . against all enemies, domestic and foreign, so help us God.

AMERICAN OPINION

A BLACK SOLDIER SPEAKS OUT

Reprinted from
AID & ABET POLICE NEWSLETTER
Constitutional Issues for Lawmen
Vol. 3, No. 4

Dear Confederates,

This is my first communication with your organization. The political climate in the military being what it is, I trust you will keep my identity confidential.

My thoughts and beliefs are somewhat confused these days. But, I want to express some feelings I've kept inside for some time. I'm a _____ Sergeant in the U.S. _____ with _____ years in service. I've been out of country for 11 months this tour. Not certain when I'll return home. Our _____ Lieutenant, risking his bars, gave several of us copies of your military and police publication several months ago. I've read one other over the last few years. This issue was very cogent as it covered comparisons of the American Constitution with the United Nations charter. The realization that soldiers can't serve under the United Nations without violating our national oath that your publication imparts did enhance my blood pressure. It also reinforced in me once again that even though many soldiers feel something is wrong with some of our missions and some of the things we are being commanded to do, so few actually know what is going on in the military and the world today.

In my career, I've seen first hand, up close, how American soldiers and the soldiers of other nations have been used to take guns and freedom away from poor, black, Asian and Hispanic people who need their guns to try to retain their freedoms by fighting against communist renegade leaders in their own nations and governments. The people of Somalia was a prime example. Going in, we were not aware that they were fighting to resist violent Marxist forces and endeavoring to live free. "PEACE ENFORCEMENT," they called it. As I viewed it, we disarmed the wrong side: the good people in the towns. Forthwith, the people no longer have a way to resist the barbaric, UN/U.S.-backed communist War Lords. Some of us lost good friends in that "peace enforcement" effort against the poor, Somali people. Many of them, for good cause, now detest us.

In Haiti we accomplished the same, installing a Marxist dictator (thankfully, I had no part in that U.S./U.N.-backed communist takeover). South Africa, thanks to strong American and European pressures, now suffers under a communist junto. Several million black Christian brothers and sisters are being dispatched, as I compose this letter, by the communist terror our nation advanced there. Inquiring of our superiors "why," we get no logical answer. World Peace under U.N. communism is a fraud. Our military leaders go about bewildered but undaunted. One wonders if they understand these geo-political machinations.

As did most, I entered the military to serve and protect the freedoms and property of the people of my own nation against totalitarianism, communism, or fascism (which are all the same). Can anyone logically articulate how we are assisting our country, or these other poor nations' people, by forcing them under world communism? This kind of thinking has drawn me some heat, regardless. I suppose that since I performed well at removing the freedoms of one nation's people I'm now in a "special unit" in another nation using my talents to enslave another people. Several of us, including the Lieutenant, understand that we are once again being used here to undermine the present government of this non-communist dictatorship and prepare it to become another asset of the United Nations. Understanding this, as you can imagine, puts us in a shameful and stressful situation. It's difficult to change one's job description from one of guarantor of freedom to one of facilitator of world slavery. I don't mean to denigrate other fellow military members, but from an historical position, this enslavement of poor people is particularly difficult for Afro-American soldiers.

Most of us in the U.S. military do not understand what we are a part of. Soldiers, and "the folks back home" are told that we're helping the poor and oppressed people in other countries. I could live with that, but it's not true. It's like we are mercenaries for the highest bidder, not American soldiers. We, of course, can't speak out-loud about these feelings, for reasons you're already aware of.

I've heard of your educational activities and publications for several years. Your publications are passed around "quietly" because there are some political problems associated with being caught with patriot or constitutional materials. We have been instructed that any U.S. individuals or groups that espouse or publish about "patriotic activism," "constitutional violations" or government conspiracies are subversives and it will do our careers severe damage to express interest or get involved. That speaks volumes, since some in the military (including up the Chain) are members of anti-American, leftist movements or groups. This has no deleterious effect on their careers. More factually stated, having a leftist world view is somewhat beneficial at promotion time. We see this and more and discuss it quietly. As I see it, more of us are beginning to see the truth and that's good, but it does seem the day may come when we will all have to decide whom and what we will serve. There is no longer the pride we once experienced in the days when we served only our nation and its people. Will we see a return to those days?

We ask you to gird yourselves for rough times and continue sending out the newsletters as long as you can. The knowledge passed on through its pages to those of us in the active service of the U.N. (not the U.S.) is important and timely. In that regard, pass this on to the citizens stateside who are told that "We are now serving under NATO." NATO is a red herring; it's still the U.N. in power. They changed the command to NATO to protect the U.N. program from the growing storm of contention and controversy over their Marxist goals and leadership. NATO is under U.N. control, according to past records of agreements. (Investigate and be clear.) The test is to look and see what colors fly. Look closely and observe the U.N. blue and white that many of our Afro-American brothers and sisters, along with the Hispanics, are misled to believe that a one-world system is going to be our people's answer to total equality and freedom. "Quality" time in the military has allowed some of us to see the truth. I've beheld communism's true FACE, its history written in the drawn, despondent faces of millions. "All races and many creeds, just as dead under that exploitive system!"

There is one positive thing about communist internal subversive takeovers. They always kill the captured nation's traitors, since they understand that, if they would sell-out their own people, they certainly cannot be trusted. This serves to help purify the gene-pool! The communist leaders are hiding the fact that they are very wealthy from money and property they take from the poor, not the rich, yet they speak of "liberation of the poor." They "liberate" the poor of what little they have, under the banner of "equality" and secretly live opulent lifestyles themselves, secretly always retaining power and untold riches. I see now that this is the same falsehood they have instilled in my people in the U.S.

Some of us can now see plainly that, under the United Nations world government plan, the only difference is, this time Afro-Americans will not be enslaved alone. The rich Marxists in America and around the world are no respecters of persons. Afro-Americans will be enslaved right along with all other non-wealthy Anglos, Hispanics, Asians, and other indigenous peoples of the world, all made to serve the masters of a "world plantation." There is no satisfaction for my people in this arrangement. Therefore, we must all do our part, our duty, and see that this world imperialism does not succeed.

Sincerest gratitude to all our fellow soldiers and police assisting in your efforts to stop this insidious one-world program, and in addition, for sending out the special military newsletters. Tell all there that the most gratifying message you send us is that of assuring us we're not alone in this war.

Well-worn copies of your publications are passed on to members of my unit and then on to others. Be advised some of us here will continue to educate as many as we can in regards to real duty and true freedom, until we prevail.

SHERIFF SPEAKS OF "DUTY TO THE PEOPLE"

AID & ABET POLICE NEWSLETTER

Have you seen the new Brady Bill II (H.R. 3932 and S. 1878)? Well, if you haven't, stand by; here it comes. This one is real bad and needs every effort to get it put away. President Clinton and Sarah Brady are at it again and this time they are going all out to make it impossible for you to protect yourself. Most of the gun stores have copies of this bill, as reported by the National Rifle Assn.

In short, it requires things like a $300 three-year license from the BATF if you own 20 firearms or have 1,000 rounds of ammo in your home. Along with this, BATF can search your home unannounced three times during each year. This bill also outlaws most production handguns and many other weapons and allows you to buy only one handgun per month. It removes the sunset on the 7-day waiting period and makes it happen even with insta-check.

What they are after is to take all your gun rights away and make it so hard to get them, and drive people out of business who sell firearms or manufacture them. They think they can convince you that this is the answer to crime. Then once you are dependent on the government and police for all your protection, who will protect you from them?

One of my young Deputies came up to me after seeing this report and asked me what they were trying to do to him and all police officers. He then went on to point out how now the bad guy may have a cheap handgun that may or may not work when he attacks a police officer. This bill will only make quality weapons available for the bad guy and get more police officers killed.

The bottom line is, they want to take all firearms away from the law-abiding citizen and this will only make you defenseless. Then the bad guys and the government will rule the day and our way of life so that we have no freedom left. America will come to an end as we know it.

Again I say: Don't just sit back and hope someone does something. Let your elected representatives know how you feel and then vote for those who will protect your rights. Join and support the NRA before it is too late.

A study done by John Lott and David Mustard, "Crime, Deterrence, and Right-to-Carry Concealed Handguns," in the Journal of Legal Studies, January 1997 issue, shows that if all States in America had adopted the right to carry laws, approximately 1,570 murders, 4,177 rapes, and over 60,000 aggravated assaults would have been avoided yearly. Can you imagine what the crime rate would look like under the new Brady Bill? We in law enforcement need your help to make sure we remain a free and safe people. This is as vital as anything I have ever asked for. Please take the time to tell others and get people involved. We will not have the same freedoms for our children and grandchildren, if we don't.

A couple of years ago I had the opportunity to talk with a Major in the Russian Police Force from Moscow. He was here doing a study on American Law Enforcement. First he asked me how many homicides we dealt with each day. His impression from our media was that we had one about every hour. I told him we normally have one to six a year in Coos County and he was shocked. Our media does a fine job telling us we are a violent country.

This Major told me that his job was to head up the division of their national police that deals with gun smuggling and narcotics. He then indicated that in Russia the only people allowed to have firearms are police and military. They have a big problem with gun smuggling and all the criminals have firearms. He said they are not afraid to attack citizens because they know they are not armed. By the same token, they often shoot it out with the police. He told me that in the past year they had almost 400 officers killed in Russia. In America we had only 62 officers killed the same year.

This tells me something. First, America is not a violent country, and second, outlawing firearms from our citizens will only make one more big problem for us. It points out that an armed society is indeed a polite society. At the very least, a safer society. So stop and think about what I have said. This could be America.

American Patriot Profile

Through out history, there have been only a handful of men who have taken a stand against Tyranny. From Moses to William Wallace to James Madison and Patrick Henry, the few, the brave and the courageous have led the many, the reluctant and the frightened, against seemingly unsurmountable odds. They have been labeled revolutionaries, rebels, traitors, kooks and criminals by their respective despots.

As we approach the twenty first century, the powers that be plan to merge us into a New World Order that, in reality, is no different from the ideal world envisioned by the pharaohs, the Syrians, the Romans or the King of England. This "perfect world" is using our soldiers to disarm the Serbs and the Australians as you read this. Soon, Multi-national peace-keeperers from the countries that once comprised the former Soviet Union will try to do the same here.

As in the past, a few brave men stand in the forefront, facing down the would-be tyrants. Here is one of them.

AID & ABET POLICE NEWSLETTER
Constitutional Issues for Lawmen
Vol. 3, No. 4

I have known Jack McLamb for almost a decade. According to the federal government, as of September 1996, he is under criminal investigation for "conspiracy."

Conspiracy for what?

They don't exactly know, but there has to be something and they'll find it. All we do know is that because of this officer's "seditious" constitutional educational work with fellow police and soldiers, he must be taken down.

GERALD JACKSON McLAMB,
aka Jack McLamb

1976 - Military vet turns police officer.
1976-1979 Highest decorated police officer in Phoenix Police history.

1980 - Founder of THE AMERICAN CITIZENS & LAWMEN ASSN

1981 - The founding publisher of the international police/military freedom publication, AID & ABET POLICE/MILITARY NEWSLETTER, subtitled Constitutional Issues for Lawmen.

1986 - Injured in the line of duty and medically retired.

1992 - Founder of the international proactive, pro-God, pro-nationalism police/military organization, POLICE AGAINST THE NEW WORLD ORDER.

Today, this military veteran and veteran police officer, Jack McLamb, is one of the most hated men on earth by those in each of our governments who are covertly working day and night to ensnare all "human resources" (people) on earth into their New World Order.

Suspect McLamb is a decorated Vietnam War era veteran, and the most highly decorated police officer in Phoenix, Arizona history. He is a true pro-God, pro-America, anti-globalism Republican, who came close to winning the political primary race for Sheriff of Maricopa County, Arizona in 1982. A few of his awards are the coveted Phoenix Police Officer of the Year Award twice and runner-up another year, along with numerous other commendations and awards, all within his first few years of service in the 7th largest city in the U.S., and within a department of over 2000 sworn officers. Additionally, as a result of his city-wide police program for children's safety (later adopted by the Sears Roebuck Foundation as the nationally acclaimed "Officer Friendly Program"), many in law enforcement and government agree that at one time Officer

Jack McLamb founder Police Against The New World Order

McLamb had a most promising future in government. That was until, in 1978, he DISCOVERED HIS OATH AND WHAT IT ACTUALLY SAID. He learned he was a violator of the oath he had taken both as a soldier and as a police officer. He learned that as a matter of routine policy and procedure, he was unwittingly violating people's rights and that he had faithfully upheld what is known in government and in law enforcement as the CODE OF SILENCE, thereby betraying his sworn oath to defend the U.S. Constitution and the People's rights and liberties.

McLamb: "TYRANNY Cannot Succeed Without Help of Police and Soldiers"

Having taken his oath seriously both times that it was administered to him, Officer McLamb, at the cost of his career, immediately started on a course of study that would convict his heart and cause him to return to upholding that oath, no longer to be used to violate his own moral convictions, the Constitution, or the rights of the American People. But in the months that followed, while continuing to serve and protect his fellow Arizonans to the best of his ability (and winning more awards along the way), his most unusual and very unpopular commitment to the People rather than to "the state" meant he was destined to become the most governmentally scorned, surveilled, investigated, persecuted, maligned and, yes, the most fired police officer in Phoenix, Arizona history. Twice he was fired for his daughtless efforts (on behalf of his true superiors, the PEOPLE) to educate and rally his fellow lawmen and soldiers, to stand against immoral, despotic and criminal activities within local, state and federal government agencies.

Following both of his firings, the City of Phoenix Civil Service Board reviewed his case, admonished Phoenix Police Chief Ruben Ortega, and the department for their "vendetta against Officer McLamb for his 1st Amendment exercise to speak and to write his fellow police officers and soldiers about moral and constitutional issues." It then returned him to duty with full back pay. His career potential, however, was at an end. For the success of his educational work, and for his dedication to God, and for upholding his oath in service and protection of the sovereign people of Arizona, Officer McLamb had now merited the government's label, "TRAITOR WITHIN."

The National Sheriff's Association ran an article stating that his police publication, "AID & ABET POLICE NEWS-LETTER, Constitutional Issues for Lawmen," was a seditious publication and inferred that police officers should not read it. This sworn officers' publication, addressing the highest of morals, of honor, of great patriotic sacrifice in service to the PEOPLE and the REPUBLIC, has been so successful in awakening Officer McLamb's fellow cops and soldiers to their duty to serve and protect the people of their nation, that it is listed by America's socialist governmental agencies as "seditious" and "anti-government." In addition, major U.S. socialist media outlets, and hundreds of leftist, pro-World Government hate groups are joining with government globalists attempting to stop Officer McLamb and the literally hundreds of thousands of people around the world today who are working with him to awaken their nation's natural patriotic police and soldier protectors to the treasonous activities and plans of the globalist, despotic "superiors" within their respective governments.

As his pro-freedom, constitutional education work began to manifest itself within the proud and honorable hearts, minds and souls of thousands of his patriotic fellow lawmen and soldiers around the nation, McLamb was placed under 24-hour surveillance by his department, actually being secretly assigned a cold-hearted police sergeant named Kelderhouse, to surreptitiously follow him night and day, on duty and off duty, in the city and out of the city, to try to catch Officer McLamb doing anything at all wrong, so that there might be "cause" to fire him again. Nine months and hundreds of thousands of tax dollars later, having failed to produce a criminal act, the department called off their "hit man," but never their vendetta.

Then as his work to inform his colleagues in uniform at the federal, state and local levels succeeded, and more of them joined in to "JUST SAY 'NO' TO IMMORALITY, CORRUPTION AND LAWLESSNESS" under the facade of "just doing my job," "for the good of the country," and "just following orders," Officer McLamb was placed under criminal investigation twice by the federal government. To stop him, it seemed that "anything" - or nothing! - would suffice to incarcerate McLamb and thereby put an end to his patriotic endeavors of awakening the government's much needed, unwitting Enforcers. Both times, however, not finding any reason to put him on trial, the federal government dropped the investigation.

As further punishment for his efforts to protect the people from a government out-of-control, the IRS was sent in to impose a tax bill for $50,000, challenging McLamb to prove he didn't owe it. This occurred just several months after McLamb returned from Arkansas, having led a team of 11 federal, state, and local officers from 9 states to re-investigate a double homicide committed by federal agents there, together with a subsequent cover-up. One of the two victims was fellow lawman, Gene Matthews, Sheriff of Lawrence County.

The federal judge gave the IRS one and a half years to try to "legally" confiscate a piece of property from out of a trust wherein Officer McLamb had placed it 10 years before. The IRS failed. Meanwhile, after 5 trips to Arkansas and the exhumation and second autopsy on the body of the other victim, the unofficial police investigation team, led by top-notch investigator, Officer Rick Dalton, reports now having all the evidence needed to prove that both victims were killed by government officials. One, (possibly both) was executed by federal agents, and a massive cover-up, involving federal, state (Mr. Clinton's administration), and local officials, was set in place. The entire home (crime scene) was intentionally arsoned by federal agents, using the fire as the tool to cover-up the capital crimes and destroy the executed person's body, together with the crime scene.

As often happens with such government-sponsored crimes, Officer McLamb's team of police investigators, representing a collective 120 years of police experience, has so far been unable to get any official agency — federal, state or local, including congress - to look at the mounds of hard evidence which the officers have gathered proving these capital crimes. The unofficial police investigative team has grown now to over 40 officers, as these dedicated protectors of the people continue to pursue justice in this case.

Officer McLamb lost his marriage, in part due to the ever-present government pressure and persecution, and to his obsession with bringing criminals in government to answer for their crimes, and hopefully, ultimately, wresting the nation from the establishment international organized crime families who control both sides of the U.S. two-party political syndicate. When asked about being called a "seditionist" for doing nothing more than upholding his oath and preaching God and Country, Officer McLamb replied - "Remember when the PATRIOTS were in office and the CRIMINALS were in jail? With God's blessing, we will see that again in America."

Despite all the persecution, in 1984 Officer McLamb won the Officer of the Month award and the same year came in second for the Officer of the Year award. In 1986 he sustained serious injuries in the line of duty while halting the in-progress criminal activities of a known illegal alien drug smuggler, and was thereupon forced to take a medical retirement. Ever since that time, McLamb has been praising God daily for the steady, growing support offered by all the wonderful Freedom-loving activists helping to bring continuing success to his efforts to rally his colleagues in uniform all over America. In the last several years, many soldiers and police officers from other nations of the world, realizing that they, too, have been unwitting accomplices to the same international criminal syndicate in control of their own governments, are requesting that Officer McLamb's group, POLICE AGAINST THE NEW WORLD ORDER, assist them also in helping their countrymen regain control of their own respective Lands.

In December of 1993, while speaking at a well-attended gun show in Phoenix, Arizona, concerning the people's unalienable right to keep and bear arms, and about how many American police support the 2nd Amendment, a special meeting was hastily called on Saturday at the office of Phoenix' Chief of Police.

A plan was devised to arrest retired Officer McLamb. No state violations could be found to incarcerate him, so a 35-year-old city code book was dragged out and dusted off. In this old book two obscure city ordinances (which research shows had never been used to prosecute and incarcerate anyone before) were applied to McLamb's 1st Amendment, constitutional activities at the gun show. Officer McLamb was arrested (for the first time in his life) that day and prosecuted to the full extent of the dubious laws. He was facing a possible one year in jail and $4,000 in fines. For various reasons, too lengthy to go into here, Officer McLamb was found "not guilty" on one charge and guilty on the other. The case is still in appeal.

This is the short version of the continuing saga of the government's attacks on Officer Jack McLamb. Much more persecution and oppression has occurred and continues to occur in Jack's life since his awakening to his true duty; but through it all still, that "ole Irish cop" sticks to his oath to defend and protect the people of the nation from all enemies.

BACK UNDER CRIMINAL INVESTIGATION

Through certain friends within and outside government, Officer McLamb says he has recently learned that the federal government has him back under criminal investigation. Once again, as twice before, he does not know for what. All he knows is that it is a charge of "conspiracy." Several federal friends have explained that the conspiracy charge is a well worn political charge: It is the only charge where the accused can have done nothing and the government will present no evidence, yet the accused can be found "guilty." This is why the charge is used on the government's political opponents. IF the government were to be honest and go by the law and not "politics," a person would be found guilty of conspiracy only if he and another agree to commit a crime. (See U.S. vs Sangmeister 685 F 2d 1124.)

Now medically retired from police duties, and managing some old injuries that tend to incapacitate him at times, Officer McLamb lives grateful for his modest disability pension while continuing to do his volunteer work with the same goal of informing and calling to duty every fellow peace officer and soldier in defense of a nation in crisis. Now 18 years into the effort, he finds himself wonderfully surrounded, enjoying the help of "millions" of courageous, freedom-loving police and military colleagues and private citizens here in America, and untold numbers of the same in many other nations around the world who are now studying and sharing POLICE AGAINST THE NEW WORLD ORDER and AID & ABET constitutional and freedom materials, and returning to their sworn oaths to serve and protect their people from ALL enemies.

In the Fall of 1995, dedicated police, soldiers and private citizen patriots of first New Zealand and then Australia hosted and completely paid Officer McLamb's way, enabling him to tour their great nations, preaching God, Freedom, Hope and Action to all the tried and true freedom-loving people of their nations.

For the past several years, Officer McLamb has hosted a daily, international radio talk show, the OFFICER JACK McLAMB PROGRAM. His radio program and his police and soldier publications are both featured on the World Wide Web.

Regularly throughout the year Officer McLamb travels the nation speaking out and addressing numerous aspects of the theme - God and Freedom vs. Global Slavery under the UN New World Order.

His motivation for all this is spelled out in his police/military association's motto: 'TYRANNY CANNOT COME TO THE HOME OF FREE PEOPLE UNLESS IT COMES IN UNIFORM.'

His PRIVATE volunteerism (as opposed to socialist, government "volunteerism"), is driven, he will tell you, by the reward of looking into the faces of his three sons, their lovely brides and his seven precious grandchildren, and knowing they will have a better chance of living in a free land if all people who love God and Freedom stand together. Officer McLamb is 52 years old and says his life is dedicated to the proposition that, IF we will work together and demand a return of our nations to God's Laws - through which ALONE comes the gift of Liberty - then all God's children on earth WILL LIVE IN FREEDOM. (II Chron. 7:14).

Of course, if his work of rescuing the hearts and minds of his colleagues in uniform is to continue to thrive, it will be because his fellow countrymen are joined with him in this fast-moving, worldwide, non-violent, freedom revolution.

When asked if he thinks we will see a violent revolution in America, McLamb responds, "If Americans continue to awaken at the rate we are seeing today, both those in government and in the private sector, and if they will become politically active within their communities and states, we can still win America back from the despots in our government without bloodshed. The big problem with a peaceful solution, however, is that only one side wants it. By deliberate, evil design of the global manipulators, the very best patriots in the private sector are to be violently pitted against the very best patriots in uniform, in hopes that they will kill each other off and that this "brother killing brother" violence will scare the American people into begging for martial law. This is the hope and the plan of those who benefit from, and even instigate, horrors like bombings, crime and anarchy. Such is intended to cause great FEAR and an outcry from the majority, for the suspension of the Constitution."

When asked the final question, "WILL WE WIN?" McLamb answers, "Our Lord has promised that those who serve Him win in the end. But for now we must remember only that 'Duty is ours; consequences are God's.'" - End

TAKING DOWN McLAMB

Our government's Socialist elite are committed to stopping Officer McLamb's work, and they hope to indict and incarcerate him soon.

As all U.S. ENFORCERS can now understand, McLamb and all men and women like him around the world are our targets and MUST be stopped at all costs. For, if we police and soldiers will not BLINDLY DO WHATEVER WE ARE TOLD, the global elite combine which employs us will not be able to complete their plan to rule the world. Nuff said.

FINANCE

Cashing In On Poverty

Author: Michael Hudson

* excerpted from the book, "Merchants of Misery: How Corporate America Profits From Poverty," Edited by Michael Hudson (Common Courage Press, 1996).

Corporate America is in the poverty business and making huge profits from the destitute in the United States. Sixty million poor people without bank accounts or access to competitive-rate loans must instead use pawn shops, check-cashing outlets, rent-to-own stores, finance companies and high-interest mortgage lenders. These businesses generate yearly revenues of $200 to $300 billion and are increasingly owned or subsidized by Wall Street giants such as American Express, Bank America, Citibank, Ford, NationsBank, and Western Union.

While affluent credit card holders can pay as little as six to eight percent annual interest, low-income people are paying as much as 240% for a loan from a pawnbroker, 300% for a finance company loan, and even an amazing 2,000% for a fast "pay-day" loan from a check-cashing outlet. Large corporations use sophisticated marketing strategies to lure in new customers and increase their business. The overall number of check-cashing outlets in this country has nearly tripled to 5,500 since the late 1980s, and rent-to-own stores have skyrocketed from 2,000 to 7,500 in the same period. With a typical loan rate of 200%, Cash America's chain of pawn shops has quickly grown to 325 in the United States and expanded abroad with thirty-four outlets in the United Kingdom and ten in Sweden.

The main investor in America's $4.5 billion rent-to-own market is Thorn EMI PLC, a British conglomerate. American Express finances ACE Cash Express, a national chain of 630 check-cashing outlets. Charges average three to six percent of each check's value. Cash America, the country's largest chain of pawnshops, is bankrolled by NationsBank and traded on the New York Stock Exchange.

Even though many of us think of Ford Motor Corporation in terms of its automobile sales, their Fortune 500 status has actually been achieved through financial services holdings. In 1993, three-fifths of Ford's earnings came from car loans, mortgages and consumer loans. Associates Corporation of North America is a Ford subsidiary targeting low-income, blue-collar and minority consumers. In 1994, it financed $18.5 billion in mortgages and consumer loans and earned just under $1 billion in pre-tax profits. Stock analysts estimate that used-car loans for people with shaky credit now top $60 billion a year. Non-bank finance companies like Ford and defense contractor Textron make small loans at rates as high as 300% in some states.

Along with astronomically high charges, many low-income consumers are also victimized by additional hidden fees, forged loan documents, and harassing collection tactics. And unless there is increased government protection for the destitute or a growth in alternative non-profit financial institutions, big business will continue to expand these practices.

WHITE-COLLAR CRIME: WHITEWASH AT THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT

Source:
COVERT ACTION QUARTERLY
Date: Summer 1996
Author: David Burnham

While white-collar crime costs America 10 to 50 times more money than street crime, the Justice Department continues to show little interest in taking the problem seriously.

And while the statistics persistently underscore this contradiction, business organizations such as the U.S. Chamber of Commerce and the National Association of Manufacturers continue to claim the federal government restricts business with unnecessary and heavy-handed regulations—and implore Congress to scale back environmental, health and safety laws.

Based on the centralized records maintained by the Department of Justice

(DoJ), the data shows that when it comes to white-collar crime, the federal government almost never brings criminal charges against businesses. Of the more than 51,000 federal criminal indictments in 1994, only 250—less than one-half of one percent—involved criminal violations of the nation's environmental, occupational health and safety, and consumer product-safety laws. Given the huge number of corporations, the private admissions by business lawyers that their organizations often break the law, and a well-documented record of repeated violations, the minuscule number of federal criminal allegations hardly squares with the corporate view of business as the victim of a federal government run amok.

The small number of individuals charged with criminal violations is only one indication of the pro-business bias revealed in the DoJ's own data. Even though Congress passed the Occupational Safety and Health Act (OSHA) in 1970, the actual impact of the law was greatly reduced by the insertion of hard-to-enforce regulations and insufficient funds to provide an effective force of well-trained and well-managed investigators. And in spite of the law, the DoJ has almost always protected businesses from criminal charges—even those with corporate executives who have knowingly exposed workers to conditions that resulted in death. In 1987 alone, 50-70,000 workers died prematurely from on-the-job exposure to toxins—roughly three times the 21,500 people murdered in the same year. In the years between 1970 (when OSHA was created) and 1992, 200,000 Americans died at work, a significant number of which resulted from known negligence by the employer. Nonetheless, in those 22 years, OSHA has referred 88 criminal cases to the DoJ, which prosecuted 25 and sent one executive to jail. He served 45 days.

According to Barry Hartman, who was first deputy and then acting assistant attorney general for the DoJ's environmental and natural resources division, "environmental crimes are not like organized crimes or drugs...There you have bad people doing bad things. With environmental crimes you have decent people doing bad things. You have to look at it this way."

THE DRUG TRADE

Yet Another CIA-Mafia Drug Connection

Fred Shannon

Richard Brenneke, former CIA operative/pilot, interview puts mob boss John Gotti, and former CIA boss Donald Gregg in the middle of contra drug operations at the Mena, Arkansas Airport.

The following is a copy of Richard Brenneke's 21 June 1991 sworn deposition before Congressman William Alexander, Jr., and Chad Farris, chief deputy attorney general of Arkansas.

Congressman Alexander faxed the following to our friend Ace Hayes, editor/owner of The Portland Free Press, along with the following narrative: "... I'm sending the Brenneke transcript along with other evidence of money laundering by Barry Seal at Mena, Arkansas, and was delivered to Judge Walsh for action. Nothing followed. 'I agree that the American people deserve to know the truth about our government. Thank you for providing it. Good luck' (signed Bill Alexander, with seven pages of deposition).

In the following interview transcript, Mr. Alexander did the direct questioning and Bushman Court Reporting, Inc., did the recording.

What we have here is the red-hot smoking cannon which not only ties CIA activities to the Mafia, but also puts the White House, via George Bush, "in the loop" with the Iran-Contra operations long before it was admitted or revealed.

"Joint Investigation by the Arkansas State Attorney General's Office and the United States Congress:"

All questions were asked by Congressman William Alexander and answered by Richard Brenneke:

Q. And when you landed at Mena, what would be the disposition of the cargo?

A. On one or two occasions the cargo was taken off by people who were not residents of the Mena area and put into other aircraft which departed from there. However, the most frequent activity was that the aircraft would be unloaded in front of [deleted]'s hangers and it would be stored in the back of the hanger....

Q. And go back in your mind to the first trip you took and describe to me the disposition of the cargo; that is, the cocaine, once it returned to Arkansas, once it was delivered to Arkansas? And I am especially, I am particularly interested in the identification of persons other than [deleted]. You've talked about [deleted]. You've identified him. Can you identify other people who might have received this cocaine?

A. Yes. I can identify people who in fact received the cocaine, not "might have."

Q. Can you tell us who they were?

A. I can tell you that they were members of John Gotti's family in New York. One of them was an individual know[n] to me by the name of Sal Reale.

Q. Could you spell that name for us?

A. R-E-A-L-E. . . .

Q. Salvatore Reale?

A. Correct.

Q. And how did you know Mr. Reale?

A. Mr. Reale at that time was the Director of D9 I believe it was that time, was the Director of Security of Kennedy International Airport in New York City.

Q. . . . Speak to the subject of your knowledge of Mr. Reale and his activities as the head of security at Kennedy? Tell us what you know about him and what he did?

A. Okay. Mr. Reale was a, was one of Mr. Gotti's lieutenants. I watched the two of them interact. Mr. Gotti would provide directions, Mr. Reale would carry them out. It was his job to make sure that cargo being shipped through Kennedy was not lost, but properly located, and in some cases avoiding . . . the customs procedures.

Q. Are you saying that you saw Mr. John Gotti, the famous head of the organized crime syndicates, in New York together with Mr. Reale?

A. Yes, sir, I did.

Q. Where did you see them?

A. That was in New York City.

Q. . . . What was the occasion that permitted you to see them together, do you recall?

A. I don't recall the nature of it. I do recall that it was a private club that I was taken to, and I had an opportunity to meet with them at that time.

Q. And so, okay. Do you remember when it was you saw them together?

A. It was either late '84 or early 1985. But in that three-or-four-month time span, it would have had to have been one or the other.

Q. Was your notice of Mr. Gotti and Mr. Reale in any way connected with your contractual job with the Central Intelligence Agency?

A. Yes. As far back as 1968 and early '69, we had begun to launder money from organized crime families in New York. At that time, Mr. Gotti was an up-and-coming member of the families. I got to know them at that time. We used to wash their money out overseas and put it in Switzerland in nice, safe places for them.

Q. So you worked for Mr. Gotti as well as for the CIA?

A. Actually the CIA told me to do that on his behalf.

Q. So the CIA was in, would you say, partnership or association with Mr. Gotti?

A. Yes, sir. I would say a partnership.

Q. And can you describe the nature of that partnership?

A. Sure. The organized crime members had a need for two things: they needed drugs brought into the country on a reliable, safe basis; they needed people taken out of the country or people brought into the country without alerting customs or INS to the fact that they were being brought into the country; they also needed their money taken offshore so that it would not be subject to United States tax where they might have to declare its source. And so we performed these kinds of functions for them.

Q. Mr. Brenneke, are you saying that the CIA was in the business of bringing drugs into the United States?

A. Yes, sir. That's exactly what I'm saying.

Q. And that they were in partnership with Mr. Gotti in this operation?

A. I would say that they worked with Mr. Gotti and his organization very closely. Whether it was a formal partnership, I don't know. But there certainly was a close alliance between the two.

Q. All right. Now let's go back to the Mena Airport in Arkansas for a moment. At a time when you saw Mr. Reale there, did he receive any of the shipment, the cargo of the drugs that you brought back from Panama?

A. He did not personally take any of the drugs. He did, however, see that they were transferred into aircraft and vehicles so that they could be moved off the field, and that was his function. His function was not to load the vehicles, but to see that nothing got lost on transit.

Q. Are you saying that drugs that you brought back from Central America to Mena were for the purpose of delivery to Mr. Reale, who was in the employ of Mr. John Gotti, the New York crime syndicate boss?

A. Yes, sir. I would say that.

Q. And Mr. Reale was there to manage the transshipment of those drugs?

A. From time to time there were other people from the family down there.

Q. Did you have any conversations with him about where he intended to take those drugs?

A. Yes, sir. I asked on more than one occasion where the drugs would be taken, and I was told the New York City area, specifically Kennedy International Airport.

Q. Now, do you have any knowledge of the CIA, quote, "black bag," operations at Rich Mountain Aviation? . . . And maybe a more interesting way to ask that question would be, you knew that you were dealing with criminals; is that correct?

A. That's correct, sir.

Q. You were dealing with criminals that were transporting and selling cocaine in the United States?.....

Q. Now, did the Gotti organization, through Reale, pay money to the CIA for the drugs?

A. Yes, they did.

Q. Do you know how much money?

A. Firsthand knowledge, somewhere in the $50,000,000 bracket.

Q. How do you know how much money?

A. Because I banked that money for them in Panama City, and ultimately transferred it to other locations in Europe.....

Q. Can you recall any conversations you had with any of the CIA agents about the money, and tell us the nature of that conversation, the scope of it?

A. Sure. When I found that we were bringing drugs into the United States, and that we were receiving money which was being put into accounts which I knew to belong to the United States Government, as I'd set them up specifically for that purpose, I called Mr. Don Gregg, who was a CIA officer with whom I was acquainted, and complained about the nature of what we were doing.

Q. Now, who is Mr. Don Gregg?

A. At that time, he was . . . Vice-President George Bush's National Security Advisor. . .

Q. And can you tell us what you remember about that conversation?

A. I surely can. I was told that it was not my business, what I was flying in and out of the country. That I was hired to do specific things, and if I would do those things and not pay any attention to anything else, we would all be very happy. I didn't like that.

Q. Well, what else did he say?

A. Shut up and do your job.

Q. He said, "shut up and do your job?"

A. Essentially, yes.

Q. Did you have further contact with him?

A. Yes. Subsequently I talked to Mr. Gregg on a number of occasions as well as to other people in the Vice-President's office to voice my concern over the use of drugs in importing drugs into the United States and using the cash generated from that to perform operations which I perceived to be not put before Congress in any form....

The accuracy and validity of Mr. Brenneke's sworn deposition, taken by former Congressman William Alexander, 21 June 1991, is strongly supported by documents that have never before been published for the general reader. A small sample of these documents are herewith provided.

First is a hand-written letter, from Brenneke, to a State Department official working with the Bush/North/Gregg cocaine operation. It was labeled "confidential," dated 6 January 1986, and addressed to "Ralph."

"As I explained, there would be a separate enclosure. This is it, and it will not make anyone happy. You understand why I'm writing this for you only. I strongly urge you to destroy this. But, don't destroy the thoughts.

They are very real.

I am leaving the Central America program. I have no choice. For your own good, you should do the same.

I have closed my eyes to the damn drug scene too long. As we have discussed, Israel and the United States (no, Ralph, there is no distinction) have allowed business to continue as usual. The same people are doing business in all the same places, only now they're doing business with our assistance. We're doing the importing. I told you last year that even I fell victim to the trap. Now our so-called "friends" are blackmailing me. Ralph, we're not the good guys any more. As I have tried to tell you, we are the bad guys. You know where all this will lead just as well as I do. We both have children. You are fortunate, yours don't use drugs. You know that mine does.

This is why I'm writing you without all the fancy codes. I want you to see reality in black and white. What can the new people do? They will fall into the same trap we did. You cannot get away from these people. You know that.

*Neither of us started this business, but together we can stop it. I've been quiet way too long. You tell the boys in the basement that everyone has run out of time. If this continues I'm going public, blackmail or not. I'll take my chances and we can all live with the consequences.

Ralph, I think you should destroy this letter. It scares me just to write it.

It would be wise to discontinue contact now. You know what you have to do and so do I.

Would you also tell Don the details of this letter? He needs to know where I stand now. I know that you and he still talk.

Pass the word along that there will be no more use of my company. [See following stock certificate.] It is over.

Finally, please calm our friend down. I'm going to get him his originals next month.

For your reference, I am arranging to give the Iran material to Mr. Bush when he comes to Portland.

(Added: Notice this letter was dated 6 January 1986, which if true, put George Bush "In the Loop" as far back as this date.)

Not, of course, this letter. This is between us and whoever runs the show now. I'm not willing to listen to any more protestations. Shut it down or we all go public is the only thing you can say regarding my position.

Yours, Dick [Brenneke]

* "The boys in the basement" refers to the National Security Council, offices located in the basement of the Old Executive Office Building (OEOB). During the 1980s, the Reagan-Casey cabal used the Constitution for toilet paper.

The extra-legal gimmicks employed to evade law, congress and media ran through an alphabet soup beyond the old-time CIA, FBI, DEA, ONI, NRO, etc.

Within the National Security Council evolved the National Security Planning Group (NSPG), the Restricted Interagency Group (RIG) and the Terrorist Incident Working Group (TIWG). These had evolved by 1985 and were transitioned into new forms by the end of 1986 with the blowout of Iran-contras, and their dive-and-dump flying skills perfectly matched the job description.

Another document received from Congressman Alexander gave us the following Oliver L North quotes: ". . . Casey handed McFarlane a sheet of paper on which he had outlined plans for a new CIA anti-terrorism unit . . . [it] officially sanctioned a secret entity with a mandate to coordinate our government's response to international terrorism, preemptively if possible, retroactively if necessary. I became its first chairman . . .” (Oliver L. North, Under Fire, 1991, p. 197).

“My associates on the Task Force [members of the treasonous secret unit] included Noel Koch (and later Richard Armitage) from Defense, Dewey Clarridge and Charlie Allen from the CIA, Buck Revell and Wayne Gilbert from the FBI, Bob Oakley from State, and Art Moreau (and later General Jack Moellering) from the Joint Chiefs of Staff” (ibid., p. 198).

Other documents list the Israeli connections with CIA in the contra-cocaine program in Central America and confirms Brenneke’s story:

“Noriega, the new Comandante, made clear he was willing to be more cooperative than his predecessors. He was also feeling more heat for Panama’s role in laundering money for international drug traffickers, and he interpreted a George Bush (there’s that name again) visit in December 1983 as an appeal for more help for the Contras. . . . In Noriega’s mind, he thought Bush was saying that if Panama helped the Contras it could defuse criticism about money laundering. He passed this interpretation to a trusted adviser.

“Coincidentally, perhaps, in December 1983 the Israelis allegedly started using a CIA front company in Panama to start funnelling support to the Contras. That company was IFMA Management Company, which had originally been created in 1969 in Panama as a conduit for CIA ‘black’ funds.”

The Iran-contra-cocaine criminal iceberg was subjected to a series of bogus investigations and damage control “exposes.” The Tower Commission and Select Committee of the House and Senate on Secret Military Assistance to Iran and the Nicaraguan Opposition in 1987,” began the damage control operation for the state.

But, the hall of shame did not stop with John Tower, Ed Muskie and Brent Scowcroft or Dan Inouye and Lee Hamilton. It included Senator John Kerry and his Special Counsel Jack Blum and Staff Aid Dick McCall.

It reached to the Special Counsel, Judge Lawrence E. Walsh, and to The Iran-Contra Scandal.

The two most respected government investigations of Iran-contra turn out to be as bogus as the original “Select Committee of the House and Senate on Secret Military Assistance to Iran and the Nicaraguan Opposition.”

“The Kerry Report” of December 1988 and the “Walsh Report” of 4 August 1993 are, in our opinion, both obstructions of justice.

“The Kerry Report,” pages 130-32, blows Brenneke off:

“Brenneke said that he had worked closely with a number of Israeli agents active in the Central American weapons project who were running drugs into the United States. He said that he was told by White House officials that the operation was officially sanctioned, and he had personally discussed the operation with members of the Vice President’s staff.” (p. 130.)

The next paragraph claims an “exhaustive effort to determine whether Brenneke’s sworn statement had any basis in fact” involving the review of “thousands of pages of documents from government files relating to him [Brenneke].”

Then the entire evidence is dismissed because “Brenneke was never officially connected to US intelligence” (See Below) and “there is no evidence that any of them [arms deals] ever came to fruition” (pp. 130-31). (“Officially Connected” means there were no written contracts. Of course not, stupid, the CIA “sheepdips” all “unofficial operatives”.)

This is technically known as a non sequitur and is utterly dishonest.

Brenneke had reported drug dealing and Kerry denies he ever sold guns.

Brenneke reported he was a “contract operative” and Kerry denies he was a sworn officer.

In his 1993 book, The Big White Lie: The CIA and the Cocaine/Crack Epidemic, former-DEA agent Michael Levine describes it this way:

“For decades, the CIA, the Pentagon, and secret organizations like Oliver North’s Enterprise have been supporting and protecting the world’s biggest drug dealers. Those brave freedom fighters in Afghanistan, the Mujahedin, supply a major portion of the heroin used in the United States. The Contras and some of their Central American allies like Honduras have been documented by DEA as supplying us with at least 50 percent of our national cocaine consumption. They were the main conduit to the United States for Colombian cocaine during the 1980s. The rest of the drug supply for the American habit came from other CIA-supported groups, such as DFS (the Mexican equivalent of the CIA), the Shan United Army in the Golden Triangle of Southeast Asia, or any of a score of other groups and/or individuals like Manuel Noriega. . . .

“So with the help of American bureaucrats and gutless politicians, they put on a dog-and-pony show to demonstrate to the American taxpayers how committed they are to our war on drugs. And out of gratitude we pay them billions in aid and hundreds of millions in ‘drug war funds.’ Yet incredibly, after almost three decades of international cooperation and statistic-spouting politicians who tell us again and again how we are now ‘turning the corner in the drug war,’ drugs keep pouring across our borders at an ever-increase rate.” (pp. 463-64.)

From 1980 with the October Surprise to 1997 with the Mena-CIA-cocaine story, Dick Brenneke has had a lot to say that a lot of people have not wanted to hear.

After testifying in another trial, relative to George Bush’s participation in “The October Surprise”, held in Denver, Colorado, Brenneke was charged with several counts of perjury, but Brenneke was found not guilty of all charges by 12 Portland, Oregon, federal jurors, in May 1990.

After the trial, jury foreman Mark Kristoff said that the panel of eight women and four men believed Brenneke’s entire story. There was not a single ‘guilty’ vote on any of the five counts.

“We were convinced that, yes, there was a meeting, and he was there and the people he said were there were there also.”

The preceding quote references the alleged Paris meeting between George Bush, Bill Casey, Donald Gregg, and two secret service officers with representatives from the country of Iran, in order to “cut a deal” which would preclude Iran releasing the U.S. hostages before the November election between Reagan and Carter.

I am convinced from Brenneke’s testimony that he helped pilot the BAC-111 type aircraft from Andrews AFB to Paris; the aircraft which carried the aforementioned U.S. representatives to the meeting.

I am even further convinced, by evidence and personal interviews, Bush was there, and in a later piece I will reveal this information along with where George Bush was during the “21 Hours Unaccountable” of October 19-20, 1980.

A Pennsylvania environmental group has taken action to revoke the corporate charters of two major American corporations — WMX Technologies (formerly Waste Management, Inc.), the giant waste hauler, and CSX, a large railroad and ocean shipping company.[1]

The Community Environmental Defense League (CELDF) of Harrisburg, Pennsylvania [Thomas Linzey, president; phone: 717-545-0124], in June petitioned the attorneys general of Delaware and West Virginia, asking them to revoke the corporate charters of WMX and CSX.

A corporate charter is a piece of paper issued by the authority of state legislatures to groups of people, giving them the privilege of doing business as a "corporation." The benefits of the corporate form are many:

If a corporation causes harm, the liability of individual investors is limited by law;

Because investors are numerous and scattered, whereas managers are few and focused, managers and boards of directors control a great deal of money, and therefore a great deal of power, often answerable to no one;

Corporations can own other corporations, which can, in turn, own other corporations, thus making it very difficult, or impossible, to trace ownership and responsibility for particular corporate actions;

Because corporations can grow large (often much larger than any state government), in a dispute with government, they can field an army of attorneys and other specialists who can overwhelm the opposition, leading to an accommodation (often called a "consent decree," in which a fine is levied with no admission of guilt) rather than an aggressive prosecution by government;

Corporations, particularly those with overseas subsidiaries, can often evade taxes by fancy footwork in the bookkeeping department (which may be perfectly legal); In court proceedings, corporations enjoy a dozen or more advantages that individuals cannot (for example, fines to corporations are deductible as business expenses, whereas fines to individuals are not); Under most modern corporate charters, corporations have unlimited lifetimes, giving them a staying power and an ability to accumulate wealth and strength far beyond anything an individual could ever achieve. Beyond a certain size, corporations become so large that no fine — or even the occasional jail sentence for an errant manager — can deter them from their course. They are simply beyond social control.

As time has passed, court decisions have given corporations the legal status of "persons," giving them the same protections that the first 10 amendments to the Constitution give to natural persons (individual humans). The first 10 amendments were originally written to protect individual citizens against a tyrannical government — giving individuals rights such as "due process" and "free speech." Corporations have appropriated those rights, which they now use to influence elections, influence law-making by legislatures, influence public education, influence the media, influence and "educate" judges, and influence public policy debates.

Despite these and other advantages of incorporation, the power to give, or revoke, corporate charters still resides with state legislatures, so ultimately the American people hold power over American corporations — though during this century the people have made remarkably little use of such power.

Now CELDF has taken a first step to change this picture. Here are a few details about the two cases:

WMX Technologies

WMX Technologies (still better known by its former name, Waste Management, Inc.) is the nation's largest waste hauling firm, headquartered in Oak Brook, Illinois, but chartered in Delaware. In recent years, WMX has been charged with numerous violations of law and regulations and has paid tens of millions of dollars in fines. Based on this record, CELDF on June 14, 1995, petitioned the Attorney General of Delaware to revoke WMX's charter of incorporation. Delaware law gives the Attorney General QUO WARRANTO power to revoke the charter of any corporation for "abuse, misuse or nonuse of its corporate powers, privileges or franchises." QUO WARRANTO (a Latin phrase meaning "by what authority?") describes a proceeding in which the state demands to know by what authority an individual or corporation is exercising a franchise or liberty. Such a proceeding can end in revocation of a corporate charter.

Thomas Linzey, the president of CELDF, says Delaware courts have defined "abuse" of corporate privilege as "continued criminal violations." Linzey says he does not expect the Delaware Attorney General to take action against WMX, but eventually he may sue the Attorney General. Delaware law says the attorney general "shall" take action, Linzey says; it is not discretionary.

CSX

In recent years, CSX spills and leaks have caused pollution in several U.S. locations (for example, see REHW #230 and New York Times 11/21/91, pg. A20), including West Virginia. Based on this record, CELDF on June 9, 1995, wrote West Virginia Attorney General Darrell McGraw, Jr., seeking the revocation of CSX's corporate charter.

SOMETHING NEW

It is clear that there is a new movement afoot in this country to reassert control over corporations. The action in June by CELDF against WMX and CSX could be viewed as the opening gambit in a high-stakes chess game between corporations and the American people. It is a particularly dangerous game for corporations because, if they use their raw power to secure their present privileges against democratic control, they may light the fire under a major public debate, which would alert the public to the extraordinary nature and extent of corporate power. In the ensuing conflagration, corporate privileges could go up in smoke. At present, public attention in the U.S. is focused almost exclusively on "government" as the source of the nation's problems; corporations are nearly invisible, and certainly are nowhere near the center of public debate. Even the mainstream environmental movement for the past 25 years has sought to influence corporate behavior only indirectly, by establishing government regulations — a strategy the mainstream groups continue to pursue even though it has proven to be enormously costly and largely ineffective.

For the past 4 years, the leading proponent of democratic control of corporations has been Richard Grossman. Now, with Ward Morehouse, Grossman has started a new project called the Program on Corporations, Law and Democracy (P.O. Box 806, Cambridge, Mass., 02140; phone: (508) 487-3151; E-mail: poclad@aol.com). The new project goes beyond mere charter revocation as a strategy for making corporations more accountable. Recently Grossman and Morehouse issued a list of "Suggestions for an Agenda for Action in Arenas WE Define" — tactics for changing the behavior of corporations, going beyond corporate charter revocation. Here they are:

Rechartering corporations to limit their powers and make them entities subordinate to the sovereign people, by, for example, granting charters for limited time periods, requiring approval by communities and workers to continue in existence, making corporate managers and directors liable for corporate harms, etc.

Reducing the size of corporations by breaking them up into smaller units with less power to undermine elections, lawmaking, judicial proceedings and education; restricting size and capitalization of corporations; prohibiting one corporation from owning another corporation (some of which was accomplished by the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935).

Establishing worker and/or community control over production units of corporations to protect the "reliance interest" and other rights of workers and communities. This can be done by writing rules directly into corporate charters, such as prohibiting the hiring of replacement workers during strikes, requiring independent health and safety audits by experts chosen by workers and affected communities, and banning use of deadly chemicals, such as chlorine.

Initiating referendum campaigns, or taking action through state legislatures — and in the courts — to end constitutional protections for corporate "persons" and to require state attorneys general to undertake charter revocation or rechartering actions when petitioned by citizen groups.

Prohibiting corporations from making campaign contributions to candidates in ANY elections, and from lobbying ANY local, state and federal government bodies.

Stopping extortion and "subsidy abuse" by which large corporations rake off billions of dollars from human taxpayers through direct pay-offs and tax breaks.

Launching campaigns to cap salaries of corporate officials and tie them to a ratio of average compensation levels of production workers (say, 5:1 or 10:1), to gain greater transparency in corporate decision-making, and to end corporate tax deductions for legal fees, advertising and fines.

Encouraging worker and community-owned and -controlled cooperatives and other alternatives to conventional limited liability profit-making corporations by using law and the public treasury.

Preparing a model state corporation code based on the principle of citizen sovereignty and campaigning for its adoption, state-by-state.

Invigorating from the grassroots up a national debate on the relationship between public property, private property (including future value), and the rights of natural persons, communities and other [non-human] species when they are in conflict, and on the role of the law in resolving such conflicts in a democracy.

Richard Grossman said recently, "In about 10 states, people are looking into corporate law and histories — including how their state constitutions and state corporation codes once defined corporate rights and activity with great precision. People are learning to demystify the law, looking for organizing handles they can use to take rights and powers away from corporations.

"The large corporation is truly the dominant institution of our era. It creates dependence and feelings of helplessness, while provoking great anger. Where people have been resisting corporate harms, where corporations are overtly tyrannical, people are reflecting on the nature of corporations. They are discussing citizen sovereignty and corporate abolition. Surely we can turn people's anger away from the symbols of government and towards our real governing bodies — giant corporations. Surely we can build a powerful political movement to disempower corporations and to govern ourselves," Grossman said.

THE COMMUNIST MOVEMENT

ALIVE AND WELL IN AMERICA

The items mentioned are just the tip of the iceberg — you can probably add half a dozen laws and government programs to each of these off the top of your head.

Ten Planks of the Communist Manifesto

In 1848 Karl Marx and Frederick Engels wrote a book outlining a political ideology, titled "The Communist Manifesto". Marxism's basic theme is that the proletariat (the "exploited" working class of a capitalistic society) will suffer from alienation and will rise up against the "bourgeoisie" (the middle class) and overthrow the system of "capitalism". After a brief period of rule by "the dictatorship of the proletariat" the classless society of communism would emerge. In his Manifesto Marx described the following ten steps as necessary steps to be taken to destroy a free enterprise society. Notice how many of these conditions, foreign to the principles that our country was founded upon, have now, in 1997, been realized by the concerted efforts of socialist activists?

Our elected representatives have passed laws implementing these anti-free-domin concepts. The communists have achieved a de facto FEDERAL SOCIALIST GOVERNMENT in America. Remember, government interference in your daily life and business is intrusion and deprivation of our liberties!

First Plank: Abolition of property in land and the application of all rents of land to public purposes.

(Zoning - Model ordinances proposed by Secretary of Commerce Herbert Hoover widely adopted. Supreme Court ruled zoning to be constitutional in 1921. Private owners of property required to get permission from government relative to the use of their property. Federally owned lands are leased for grazing, mining, timber usages, the fees being paid into the U.S. Treasury.)

Second Plank: A heavy progressive or graduated income tax.

(Corporate Tax Act of 1909. The 16th Amendment, allegedly ratified in 1913. The Revenue Act of 1913, section 2, Income Tax. These laws have been purposely misapplied against American citizens to this day.)

Third Plank: Abolition of all rights of inheritance

(Partially accomplished by enactment of various state and federal "estate tax" laws taxing the privilege" of transferring property after death and gifts before death.)

Fourth Plank: Confiscation of the property of all emigrants and rebels.

(The confiscation of property and persecution of those critical - "rebels" - of government policies and actions, frequently accomplished by prosecuting them in a courtroom drama on charges of violations of non-existing administrative or regulatory laws.)

Fifth Plank: Centralization of credit in the hands of the State, by means of a national bank with State capital and an exclusive monopoly.

(The Federal Reserve Bank, 1913—the system of privately-owned Federal Reserve banks which maintain a monopoly on the valueless debt "money" in circulation.)

Sixth Plank: Centralization of the means of communications and transportation in the hands of the State.

(Federal Radio Commission, 1927; Federal Communications Commission, 1934; Air Commerce Act of 1926; Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938; Federal Aviation Agency, 1958; becoming part of the Department of Transportation in 1966; Federal Highway Act of 1916 (federal funds made available to States for highway construction); Interstate Highway System, 1944 (funding began 1956); Interstate Commerce Commission given authority by Congress to regulate trucking and carriers on inland waterways, 1935-40; Department of Transportation, 1966.)

Seventh Plank: Extension of factories and instruments of production owned by the State, the bringing into cultivation of waste lands, and the improvement of the soil generally in accordance with a common plan.

(Department of Agriculture, 1862; Agriculture Adjustment Act of 1933 — farmers will receive government aid if and only if they relinquish control of farming activities; Tennessee Valley Authority, 1933 with the Hoover Dam completed in 1936.)

Eighth Plank: Equal liability of all to labor. Establishment of industrial armies especially for agriculture.

(First labor unions, known as federations, appeared in 1820. National Labor Union established 1866. American Federation of Labor established 1886. Interstate Commerce Act of 1887 placed railways under federal regulation. Department of Labor, 1913. Labor - management negotiations sanctioned under Railway Labor Act of 1926. Civil Works Administration, 1933. National Labor Relations Act of 1935, stated purpose to free interstate commerce from disruptive strikes by eliminating the cause of the strike. Works Progress Administration 1935. Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, mandated 40-hour work week and time-and-a-half for overtime, set "minimum wage" scale. Civil Rights Act of 1964, effectively the equal liability of all to labor.)

Ninth Plank: Combination of agriculture with manufacturing industries, gradual abolition of the distinction between town and country, by a more equitable distribution of population over the country.

(Food processing companies, with the co-operation of the Farmers Home Administration foreclosures, are buying up farms and creating "conglomerates.")

Tenth Plank: Free education for all children in public schools. Abolition of children's factory labor in its present form. Combination of education with industrial production.

(Gradual shift from private education to publicly funded began in the Northern States, early 1800's. 1887: federal money (unconstitutionally) began funding specialized education. Smith-Lever Act of 1914, vocational education; Smith-Hughes Act of 1917 and other relief acts of the 1930's. Federal school lunch program of 1935; National School Lunch Act of 1946. National Defense Education Act of 1958, a reaction to Russia's Sputnik satellite demonstration, provided grants to education's specialties. Federal school aid law passed, 1965, greatly enlarged federal role in education, "head-start" programs, textbooks, library books.) (Research source: Encyclopedia Britannica.)

THE RAPE OF THE MIND

The Psychology of Thought Control, Menticide, and Brainwashing,

CHAPTER TWO PAVLOV'S STUDENTS AS CIRCUS TAMERS

Mass Conditioning Through Speech

According to official Pavlovian psychology, human speech is also a conditioned reflex activity. Pavlov distinguished between stimuli of the first order, which condition men and animals directly, and stimuli of the second order, with weaker and more complicated conditioning qualities. In this so called second signal system, verbal cues replace the original physical sound stimuli. Pavlov himself did not give much attention to this second signal system. It was especially after Stalin's publication in 1950 on the significance of linguistics for mass indoctrination (as quoted by Dobrogaev) that the Russian psychologists began to do work in this area. In his letter, Stalin followed Engel's theory that language is the characteristic human bit of adaptive equipment. That tone and sound in speech have a conditioning quality is something we can verify from our own experience in listening to or in giving commands, or in dealing with our pets. Even the symbolic and semantic meaning of words can acquire a conditioning quality. The word "traitor," for example, provokes direct feelings and reactions in the minds of those who hear it spoken, even if this discriminatory label is being applied dishonestly.

Through an elaborate study on speech reflexes written by one of the leading Russian psychologists, Dobrogaev, we get a fairly good insight into the ways in which speech patterns and word signals are used in the service of mass conditioning, by means of propaganda and indoctrination. The basic problems for the man tamer are rather simple: Can man resist a government bent on conditioning him? What can the individual do to protect his mental integrity against the power of a forceful collectivity? Is it possible to do away with every vestige of inner resistance?

Pavlov had already explained that man's relation to the external world, and to his fellow men, is dominated by secondary stimuli, the speech symbols. Man learns to think in words and in the speech figures given him, and these gradually condition his entire outlook on life and on the world. As Dobrogaev says, "Language is the means of man's adaptation to his environment." We could rephrase that statement in this way: man's need for communication with his fellow men interferes with his relation to the outside world, because language and speech itself the verbal tools we use are variable and not objective. Dobrogaev continues: "Speech manifestations represent conditioned reflex functions of the human brain." In a simpler way we may say: he who dictates and formulates the words and phrases we use, he who is master of the press and radio, is master of the mind.

In the Pavlovian strategy, terrorizing force can finally be replaced by a new organization of the means of communication. Ready made opinions can be distributed day by day through press, radio, and so on, again and again, till they reach the nerve cell and implant a fixed pattern of thought in the brain. Consequently, guided public opinion is the result, according to Pavlovian theoreticians, of good propaganda technique, and the polls a verification of the temporary successful action of the Pavlovian machinations on the mind. Yet, the polls may only count what people pretend to think and believe, because it is dangerous for them to do otherwise.

Such is the Pavlovian device: repeat mechanically your assumptions and suggestions, diminish the opportunity of communicating dissent and opposition. This is the simple formula for political conditioning of the masses. This is also the actual ideal of some of our public relation machines, who thus hope to manipulate the public into buying a special soap or voting for a special party.

The Pavlovian strategy in public relations has people conditioned more and more to ask themselves, "What do other people think?" As a result, a common delusion is created: people are incited to think what other people think, and thus public opinion may mushroom out into a mass prejudice.

Expressed in psychoanalytic terms, through daily propagandistic noise backed up by forceful verbal cues, people can more and more be forced to identify with the powerful noisemaker. Big Brother's voice resounds in all the little brothers.

News from Red China, as reported by neutral Indian journalists [See the "New York Times", November 27, 1954] tells us that the Chinese leaders are using this vocal conditioning of the public to strengthen their regime. Throughout the country, radios and loud speakers are broadcasting the official "truths." The sugary voices take possession of people, the cultural tyranny traps their ears with loud speakers, telling them what they may and may not do. This microphone regimentation was foreseen by the French philosopher La Rochefoucauld, who, in the eighteenth century, said: "A man is like a rabbit, you catch him by the ears."

During the Second World War the Nazis showed that they too were very much aware of this conditioning power of the word. I saw their strategy at work in Holland. The radio constantly spread political suggestions and propaganda, and people were obliged to listen because the simple act of turning off one's radio was in itself suspicious. I remember one day during the occupation when I was taking a bicycle trip with some friends. We stopped off to rest at a cafe that, we later realized, was a true Nazi nest. When the radio, which had been on ever since we arrived, announced a speech by Hitler, everyone stood up in awe, and it was a must to take in the verbal conditioning by the Fuhrer. My friends and I had to stand up too, and were forced to listen to that raucous voice crackling in our ears and to summon all our resistance against that long, boring, repetitive attack on our eardrums and minds.

Throughout the occupation, the Nazis printed tons of propaganda, Big Lies, and distortions. They even went so far as to paint their slogans on the stoops of the houses and in the streets. Every week newly fabricated stereotypes ogled at us as if to convince us of the splendor of the Third Reich. But the Nazis did not know the correct Pavlovian strategy. By satisfying their own need to discuss and to vary their arguments in order to make them seem more logical, they only increased the resistance of the Dutch people. This resistance was additionally fortified by the London radio, on which the Dutch could hear the sane voice of their own legal government. Had the Nazis not argued and justified so much, and had they been able to prevent all written, printed, or spoken communication, the long period of boredom would have inhibited our democratic conditioning, and we might well have been more seduced by the Nazi oversimplifications and slogans.

Political Conditioning

Political conditioning should not be confused with training or persuasion or even indoctrination. It is more than that. It is tampering. It is taking possession of both the simplest and the most complicated nervous patterns of man. It is the battle for the possession of the nerve cells. It is coercion and enforced conversion. Instead of conditioning man to an unbiased facing of reality, the seducer conditions him to catchwords, verbal stereotypes, slogans, formulas, symbols. Pavlovian strategy in the totalitarian sense means imprinting prescribed reflexes on a mind that has been broken down. The totalitarian wants first the required response from the nerve cells, then control of the individual, and finally control of the masses. The system starts with verbal conditioning and training by combining the required stereotypes with negative or positive stimuli: pain, or reward. In the P.O.W. camps in Korea where there was individual and mass brainwashing, the negative and positive conditioning stimuli were usually hunger and food. The moment the soldier conformed to the party line his food ration was improved: say yes, and I'll give you a piece of candy!

The whole gamut of negative stimuli, as we saw them in the Schwable case, consists of physical pressure, moral pressure, fatigue, hunger, boring repetition, confusion by seemingly logical syllogisms. Many victims of totalitarianism have told me in interviews that the most upsetting experience they faced in the concentration camps was the feeling of loss of logic, the state of confusion into which they had been brought the state in which nothing had any validity. They had arrived at the Pavlovian state of inhibition, which psychiatrists call mental disintegration or depersonalization. It seemed as if they had unlearned all their former responses and had not yet adopted new ones. But in reality they simply did not know what was what.

The Pavlovian theory translated into a political method, as a way of leveling the mind (the Nazis called it "Gleichschaltung") is the stock in trade of totalitarian countries. Some psychiatric points are of interest because we see that Pavlovian training can be used successfully only when special mental conditions prevail. In order to tame people into the desired pattern, victims must be brought to a point where they have lost their alert consciousness and mental awareness. Freedom of discussion and free intellectual exchange hinder conditioning. Feelings of terror, feelings of fear and hopelessness, of being alone, of standing with one's back to the wall, must be instilled.

The treatment of American prisoners of war in the Korean P.O.W. camps followed just such a pattern. They were compelled to listen to lectures and other forms of daily word barrage. The very fact that they did not understand the lectures and were bored by the long sessions inhibited their democratic training, and conditioned them to swallow passively the bitter doctrinal diet, for the prisoners were subjected not only to a political training program, but also to an involuntary taming program. To some degree the Communist propaganda lectures were directed toward retraining the prisoners' minds. This training our soldiers could reject, but the endless repetitions and the constant sloganizing, together with the physical hardships and deprivations the prisoners suffered, caused an UNCONSCIOUS TAMING and conditioning, against which only previously built up inner strength and awareness could help.

There is still another reason why our soldiers were sometimes trapped by the Communist conditioning. Experiments with animals and experiences with human beings have taught us that threat, tension, and anxiety, in general, may accelerate the establishment of conditioned responses, particularly when those responses tend to diminish fear and panic (Spence and Farber). The emergency of prison camp life and mental torture provide ideal circumstances for such conditioning. The responses can develop even when the victim is completely unaware that he is being influenced. Thus, many of our soldiers developed automatic responses of which they remained completely unconscious (Segal). But this is only one side of the coin, for experience has also shown that people who know what to expect under conditions of mental pressure can develop a so called perceptual defense, which protects them from being influenced. This means that the more familiar people are with the concepts of thought control and menticide, the more they understand the nature of the propaganda barrage directed against them, the more inner resistance they can put up, even though inevitably some of the inquisitor's suggestions will leak through the barrier of conscious mental defense.

Our understanding of the conditioning process leads us also to an understanding of some of the paradoxical reactions found among victims of concentration camps and other prisoners. Often those with a rigid, simple belief were better able to withstand the continual barrage against their minds than were the flexible, sophisticated ones, full of doubt and inner conflicts. The simple man with deep rooted, freely absorbed religious faith could exert a much greater inner resistance than could the complex, questioning intellectual. The refined intellectual is much more handicapped by the internal pros and cons.

In totalitarian countries, where belief in Pavlovian strategy has assumed grotesque proportions, the self thinking, subjective man has disappeared. There is an utter rejection of any attempt at persuasion or discussion. Individual self expression is taboo. Private affection is taboo.

Peaceful exchange of free thoughts in free conversation will disturb the conditioned reflexes and is therefore taboo. No longer are there any brains, only conditioned patterns and educated muscles. In such a taming system neurotic compulsion is looked upon as a positive asset instead of something pathological. The mental automaton becomes the ideal of education.

Yet the Soviet theoreticians themselves are often unaware of this, and many of them do not realize the dire consequences of subjecting man to a completely mechanistic conditioning. They themselves are often just as frightened as we are by the picture of the perfectly functioning human robot. This is what one of their psychologists says: "The entire reactionary nature of this approach to man is completely clear. Man is an automaton who can be caused to act as one will! This is the ideal of capitalism! Behold the dream of capitalism the world over a working class without consciousness, which cannot think for itself, whose actions can be trained according to the whim of the exploiter! This is the reason why it is in America, the bulwark of present day capitalism, that the theory of man as a robot has been so vigorously developed and so stubbornly held to." (Bauer)

Western psychology and psychiatry, although acknowledging its debt to Pavlov as a great pioneer who made important contributions to our understanding of behavior, takes a much less mechanical view of man than do the Soviet Pavlovians. It is apparent to us that their simple explanation of training ignores and rejects the concept of purposeful adaptation and the question of the goals to which this training is directed. Western experimental psychologists tend to see the conditioned reflex as developing fully only in the service of gratifying basic instinctual needs or of avoiding pain, that is, only when the whole organism is concerned in the activity. In that complicated process of response to the world, conscious, and especially unconscious, drives and motivations play a role.

All training, of which the conditioned response is only one example, is an automatization of actions which were originally consciously learned and thought over. The ideal of Western democratic psychology is to train men into independence and maturity by enlisting their conscious aid, awareness, and volition in the learning process. The ideal of the totalitarian psychology, on the other hand, is to tame men, to make them willing tools in the hands of their leaders. Like training, taming has the purpose of making actions automatic; unlike training, it does not require the conscious participation of the learner. Both training and taming are energy and timesaving devices, and in both the mystery of the psyche is hidden in the purposefulness of the responses. The automatization of functions in man saves him expenditure of energy but can make him weaker when encountering new unexpected challenges.

Cultural routinization and habit formation by local rules and myths make of everybody a partial automaton. National and racial prejudices are acted out unwittingly. Group hatred often bursts out almost automatically when triggered by slogans and catchwords. In a totalitarian world, this narrow disciplinarian conditioning is done more "perfectly" and more "ad absurdum."

The Urge to Be Conditioned

One suggestion this chapter is not intended to convey is that Pavlovian conditioning as such is something wrong. This kind of conditioning occurs everywhere where people are together in common interaction. The speaker influences the listener, but the listener also the speaker. Through the process of conditioning people often learn to like and to do what they are allowed to like and do. The more isolated the group, the stricter the conditioning that takes place in those belonging to the group. In some groups one finds people more capable than others of conveying suggestion and bringing about conditioning. Gradually one can discern the stronger ones, the better adjusted ones, the more experienced ones, and those noisier ones, whose ability to condition others is strongest. Every group, every club, every society has its leading Pavlovian Bell. This kind of person imprints his inner bell ringing on others. He can even develop a system of monolithic bell ringing: no other influential bell is allowed to compete with him.

Another subtler question belongs to these problems. Why is there in us so great an urge to be conditioned, the urge to learn, to imitate, to conform, and to follow the pattern of family and group? This urge to be conditioned, to submit to the communal pattern and the family pattern must be related to man's dependency on parents and fellow men. Animals are not so dependent on one another. In the whole animal kingdom man is one of the most helpless and naked beings. But among the animals man has, relatively, the longest youth and time for learning.

Puzzlement and doubt, which inevitably arise in the training process, are the beginnings of mental freedom. Of course, the initial puzzlement and doubt is not enough. Behind that there has to be faith in our democratic freedoms and the will to fight for it. I hope to come back to this central problem of faith in moral freedom as differentiated from conditioned loyalty and servitude in the last chapter. Puzzlement and doubt are, however, already crimes in the totalitarian state. The mind that is open for questions is open for dissent. In the totalitarian regime the doubting, inquisitive, and imaginative mind has to be suppressed. The totalitarian slave is only allowed to memorize, to salivate when the bell rings.

It is not my task here to elaborate on the subject of the biased use of Pavlovian rules by totalitarians, but without doubt part of the interpretation of any psychology is determined by the ways we think about our fellow human beings and man's place in nature. If our ideal is to make conditioned zombies out of people, the current misuse of Pavlovianism will serve our purpose. But once we become even vaguely aware that in the totalitarian picture of man the characteristic human note is missing, and when we see that in such a scheme man sacrifices his instinctual desires, his pleasures, his aims, his goals, his creativity, his instinct for freedom, his paradoxicality, we immediately turn against this political perversion of science. Such use of Pavlovian technique is aimed only at developing the automaton in man, not his free alert mind that is aware of moral goals and aims in life.

Even in laboratory animals we have found that affective goal directedness can spoil the Pavlovian experiment. When, during a bell food training session, the dog's beloved master entered the room, the animal lost all its previous conditioning and began to bark excitedly. Here is a simple example of an age old truth: love and laughter break through all rigid conditioning. The rigid automaton cannot exist without spontaneous self expression. Apparently, the fact that the dog's spontaneous affection for his master could ruin all the mechanical calculations and manipulations never occurred to Pavlov's totalitarian students. END

"Who are the militia? Are they not ourselves? Is it feared, then, that we shall turn our arms each man against his own bosom? Congress shall have no power to disarm the militia. Their swords and every other terrible implement of the soldier, are the birth-right of an American The unlimited power of the sword is not in the hands of either the federal or the state governments, but where I trust in God it will ever remain, in the hands of the People."

The Global Megacorp State

Part 2 of a three part series

rkmoore@iol.ie

Within the context of the anarchistic nation-state world system, the all-but-implemented final stage is a Global Imperial America. But if such were to be formally instituted, it would be highly unstable. Uncle Sam trying to rule a traditionally-structured world empire would make the Vietnam debacle look like a Sunday picnic.

It is a tribute to the acumen (I didn't say wisdom) of our world leaders that they were well aware of this final-stage instability, and that they took effective steps to institute a new organizing principle.

Preparations began during WW II (FDR & Churchill's United Nations Declaration) for the first-ever hierarchical world system. Since that time, by means (both overt and covert) of treaty arrangements, economic/political pressures, and military interventions, the US has used its dominant position to guide, bribe, and coerce the world into its current globalist phase.

Globalization brings the necessary new organizing principle, a principle stable enough to create and maintain a new world order - at least for a while. The new principle is capitalist/corporate hegemony, and the infrastructure which supports it is the collection of transnational corporations, with their astronomical resources and control of the global economy.

To a large extent, the megacorps already are the world system.

They operate globally, they directly control global finances and much of the world's economic activity, and they've put together a set of mechanisms (WTO et al) that regulates, on a harmonious collaborative basis, the rules of their collective game.

Globalization, at its heart, is the yielding of political sovereignty to this proven corporate system - acknowledging that nation-states have evolved themselves into a historical cul de sac. If the corporate elite can keep the world-system trains running, so to speak, that seems to be preferable, to many, to the uncertain future of nation-state political developments.

The price to be paid - disenfranchisement and exploitation of the citizenry - is not clearly marked on the price tag of globalization. As the price becomes widely evident - as it already is in the ThirdWorld - instability will arise from citizen unrest.

Similarly, as the elite-controlled multinational force takes over control of international affairs, the media has recently announced a planned reduction in coverage of international news. Purportedly reflecting changes in viewer preferences, the reduced coverage can more reasonably be taken as a verification of the fact that military interventions are now to be decided above the level national governments, and that popular rabble-rousing for such activity will no longer be required.

What I'm describing, in case it's not apparent, is the death of democracy. After a brief two-centuries of existence, democracy is being superceded by a corporate variety of neo-feudalism. Weakened and subservient nation-states are becoming hardly more than fiefdoms, whose governments have little role other than to keep the population in line and extract tribute (personal taxes) to be passed on to the corporate overlords as repayment of debt. All foreign policy and activity, and most domestic policy and activity, is to be managed offline from the democratic process by the lords of the manor - corporations and their representative agencies.

The democratic institutions themselves may continue to exist, with elections, legislatures, courts, etc., but the governments are being disempowered, and the whole notion of meaningful popular sovereignty via representative democracy is rapidly becoming only a nostalgic memory. Thus the anarchistic nation-state world system is being replaced by a hierarchical world system with the WTO et al at the apex of the social and economic power pyramid, and the US-NATO axis at the apex of the military power pyramid - both controlled by the same elite corporate interests.

This leaves us, however, with an anarchistic economic system. To be sure the WTO et al lay down the ground rules as a central authority, but the operating economy itself - who owns what, which development projects are to be undertaken, whether beans or corn will be planted, who will merge with whom, etc. - is an anarchistic competitive game. The disenfranchisement, exploitation, and instability that is in store for everyone is bound to lead, as noted earlier, to chronic social unrest in the First World as well as the Third. In the meantime, social services, unemployment, infrastructure maintenance, and crime have all been greatly worsened by the intentional bankrupting of governments. Already we've seen massive protests of globalist measures in the First World, including Australia, France, and Germany.

This then is the overall picture of our globalist future: nations - possibly devolved in size - reduced to police-state, tax-collecting fiefdoms, paying tribute to outside-the-law corporate overlords - who in the meantime are organizing themselves into global monopolies while they operate the world's affairs. One is reminded of the evidently prophetic visions of such futuristic films as Rollerball and Blade Runner, with their haunting images of megacorp splendor contrasted with social squalor, repressive police, and political bankruptcy.

If at a future time some nation might decide to re-assert its sovereignty through repudiation of treaties and debts and the expropriation of corporate facilities, then the multilateral force can make short shrift of such boldness, much as the US has done for decades in Latin America. That which globalism joins together, none may dare set asunder.

"There's a proud array of soldiers - what do they round your door? They guard our master's granaries from the thin hands of the poor." Lady Jane Wilde (1826-96): The Famine Years

It is perhaps ironic that the final end of major warfare - an achievement right-thinking people for centuries have yearned for - seems destined to usher in an ominous new Dark Millennium. Be careful what you ask for, warned the sage, you might get more than you bargained for. So true. But there is a ray of hope: corporate globalism is not the only possible future. It is not mandated by natural forces - media propaganda notwithstanding - but is the intentional result of think-tank research, elite planning, and corporate political activism.

For a few years yet - very few - democratic institutions may retain enough power that an aroused citizenry could achieve political ascendancy in their several nations in time to moderate the plunge into a global laissez-faire corporatist regime. The time is running short for political movements of sufficient breadth and vision to emerge from the sea of vague dissatisfaction and provide a focus for citizen awakening. Any potential leaders and organizers who want to make a difference had better focus on the Main Problem and seek, with others, to form broad, inclusive, coalition movements around reclaiming democracy, reasserting national sovereignty, and restructuring the relationship (tax and regulatory) between governments and corporations.

And I won't be laughing at the lies when
I'm gone
And I can't question how or when or why when I'm gone
Can't live proud enough to die
when I'm gone
So I guess I'll have to do it while I'm here.

Tape Catches Choice Words About Clinton

By John F. Harris

The Washington Post Reports on Chretien's comments

President Clinton was running late, and Canadian Prime Minister Jean Chretien was running a seminar on the American political system — and how to deal with its chief executive.

Chretien, chatting this morning with two European leaders while waiting for Clinton to arrive at a meeting, apparently did not realize that his remarks were being picked up by a television network's audio system. In his caustic discourse, he even derided Clinton's motives for promoting an expansion of the NATO alliance — the very reason world leaders gathered here this week.

"I know the rules," Chretien confided to Belgian Prime Minister Jean-Luc Dehaene. "It's not for reasons of state. It's all done for short-term political reasons." Domestic politics, Chretien said, was the reason Clinton was pushing here for consideration of the Baltic states when NATO considers admitting more former Warsaw Pact states in 1999. The reason Clinton cares, according to Chretien, is because ethnic voting blocks in the United States are pushing their cause.

"Take the quarrel over whether to admit the Baltic states," Chretien said, in remarks that were aired by the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. "That has nothing to do with world security. It's because in Chicago Mayor [Richard] Daley controls lots of votes for the [Democratic] nomination."

Chretien's remarks, which were made in French, came as he and the other 14 NATO leaders were waiting for Clinton to arrive for a meeting this morning. Clinton was about 20 minutes late, and TV footage showed several of the leaders looking grumpy. British Prime Minister Tony Blair and French President Jacques Chirac were chatting and looking impatiently at their watches.

A White House aide said Clinton, who often runs behind schedule, was tardy this time for reasons beyond his control: Because of traffic problems, Spanish protocol officers supposedly held up his motorcade. Chretien filled the time talking with Dehaene and Luxembourg Prime Minister Jean-Claude Juncker, delivering an impromptu seminar on the intricacies of U.S. politics, as well as his tricks for dealing with Clinton.

"I make it my policy," Chretien said, to "stand up" to Clinton, adding that this makes him more popular with his own constituents. "It's delicate," Chretien said. "He's so huge."

Chretien's candor could be a problem for Clinton. For months, White House officials have been trying to rebut criticism from foreign policy analysts that Clinton's NATO expansion policy was motivated by domestic considerations. Now that view has an endorsement, however unintentional, from one of America's closest allies. But Chretien's view was no more charitable toward the entire U.S. political process. If lawmakers in Canada or Belgium followed American practices, Chretien told Dehaene, "all the politicians would be in prison because they sell their votes."

White House press secretary Michael McCurry, informed of Chretien's remarks this evening, declined to comment. "They sound interesting, they sound private," he said. "I refer you to the Canadian delegation for comment." But the Canadians had already left Madrid.

Some of Chretien's remarks about Clinton were boastful. After Chretien helped Clinton settle a dispute on Tuesday with Chirac over which countries should be admitted in the first round of NATO expansion, the Canadian said Clinton told him, "Jean, you saved my bacon." Some other Chretien remarks sounded more disdainful. He said he enjoyed defying the Clinton administration on a U.S. law aimed at punishing foreign companies that do business in Cuba.

"I make it my policy, but it's popular," he said. "The Cuba affair, I was the first to stand up. People like that." END

A former CIA deep-cover agent turns whistleblower at great risk

Vietnam Special Forces Air Combat Controller; 25-year CIA deep-cover agent; US Army pilot flying classified missions during the US invasion of Grenada; Iran-Contra pilot flying cocaine shipments labelled as medical supplies; and member of the ultra-secret, international G7-run Pegasus "hit team"...this is the extraordinary story of Gene "Chip" Tatum.

From sensitive, highly secretive (and hitherto largely unknown) Special Forces covert operations in Cambodia, to wandering CIA asset; through to "black ops" activities in Grenada and Oliver North's Iran-Contra "Enterprise", as well as membership in an international "hit team", Gene "Chip" Tatum has seen it all, done it all and is now telling it all.

Tatum claims to know where the skeletons are buried. Above all, he is aware that his testimony implicates serving and former US Presidents plus a whole list of high-level government officials and others in a welter of nefarious activities - including assassination, blackmail, coercion, gun-running, money-laundering and cocaine-trafficking.

Tatum, a lanky Floridian, turned whistleblower following his arrest on a treason charge in early 1995. The charge was both astonishing and patently ludicrous, and was later dropped and replaced by a fraud charge - a drastic step-down. Found guilty, he was sentenced to serve a 15-month sentence. In March 1996, an additional charge - conspiring to embezzle - was brought against him. Found guilty, he was incarcerated in Jesup Federal Correctional Facility, Georgia, where he served a 27-month concurrent sentence. Ensuing press interest resulted in one article appearing in the Tampa Tribune on 4 May 1996.

Many questions continue to hang over the conduct of the trial. His defence lawyer refused to call any of the 80 witnesses whom Tatum nominated for the defence. Later, his lawyer freely confessed to having come under pressure from the US Department of Defense. Tatum says the first charge was a set-up to discredit him following his "resignation" from "Operation Pegasus". The second charge he views with greater scepticism and concern.

Tatum's resignation from Pegasus followed his refusal to "neutralise" a leading US political figure in the 1992 US presidential elections. Tatum declares he will not "participate in assassinations of any sort, character assassinations or anything, of American citizens". He goes on to explain that back in 1994, in a telephone conference call involving Oliver North, Felix Rodriguez and the late William Colby of the CIA, he was warned to turn over incriminating documents and tapes he had accumulated for his "retirement". He wryly observes that had he done so, he would probably have been quickly "terminated" in an "extreme" way - a speciality of the Pegasus team of which he was once a member.

Countering this demand, Tatum volunteered to plead guilty on a fabricated felony count and serve a 12-month sentence - so that his credibility would be damaged in the event he ever decided to speak out. His incarceration for the second charge - and especially the six-month sentence of his wife, Nancy - led him to speak out about his life, almost 30 years of which he served as a "black" operative, and to reveal and destroy the command structure of Pegasus.

It is an extraordinary story.

"OPERATION RED ROCK"

Tatum has written of his early career in the military, and his involvement in a highly sensitive and classified operation, in an unpublished manuscript entitled "Operation Red Rock". Joining the Air Force in February 1970, he went through Army jump school, escape and evasion training, jungle training, sea survival school and diving school and was assigned along with six others as "Combat Controllers" (the USAF equivalent of Special Forces), receiving his distinctive Special Forces burgundy-coloured beret. From there he was assigned to Tinker Air Force Base, Oklahoma, and then on to Fort Bragg, North Carolina - home of the "Green Berets" - for training in C4 plastic explosives, mines, nuclear, biological and chemical warfare, plus indoctrination in electronic and psychological operations.

Posted to South-East Asia as Airman First Class (A1C) in December 1970, he was assigned as a radio operator on a Forward Air Control (FAC) aircraft attached to Task Force Alpha at Nakhon Phanom, Thailand. In short order he was recruited (an involuntary "volunteer") to "Team Red Rock". The team was composed of eight US Army Green Berets, three US Navy SEALs and two "cowboys" - a euphemism for CIA paramilitary specialists. With Tatum attached, Team Red Rock totalled 14 in all, and was about to be tasked with an operation that came directly from the White House.

In January 1971 the team received a final briefing from General Alexander Haig, who had flown in specially, along with CIA Saigon Chief William Colby - nicknamed by the team as "Mr Peepers" because of his resemblance to a well-known character in a TV sitcom. Haig and Colby outlined the plan, stressing its importance and extreme classification. President Nixon, desperate to quell domestic riots over an increasingly unpopular war, sought to withdraw all US personnel from South-East Asia. Withdrawal would - and, in the end, ultimately did - cause a military vacuum, quickly leading to the defeat of South Vietnamese forces.

During those years, Nixon was also running a "secret war" in Cambodia and Laos. In Laos, a dwindling number of Meo tribesmen, together with covert US personnel employed by the CIA proprietary company, Air America, were battling against superior North Vietnamese ground forces.

A much similar pattern was occurring in Cambodia, amid grave fears that the "domino theory" would result if either of these two nations were to fall to the Communist North Vietnamese. Nixon hoped that the vacuum caused by the withdrawal of US covert forces could be filled by native Cambodian forces. Lon Nol, the Cambodian leader, stubbornly continued to resist Nixon's diplomatic overtures to take up the slack, being anxious to hedge his bets and realistic about his chances of survival as Khmer Rouge and Vietnamese forces prepared to swarm in, unhindered by US air power.

A plan had been drawn up at the highest levels of Nixon's administration. Team Red Rock were to enter Cambodia's capital, Phnom Penh, in secret and attack the airport and military and civil installations, wreaking as much havoc as possible. The plan called for the team to parachute into the outskirts of Phnom Penh, carrying captured NVA "Sappers" with them. Taken in unarmed and alive, the Sappers would be "sacrificed" and their bodies left to be discovered by Cambodian forces. A furious Lon Nol would assume North Vietnam was to blame. It was hoped that such an act would stiffen Lon Nol's backbone. With nowhere else to turn, the US puppet would urgently seek US hardware to strengthen his forces and continue the battle.

The team members were not told that they, too, were to be sacrificed by their President to ensure that word of the operation never reached the light of day. A detachment of Montagnard tribesmen ("the Yards"), in the pay of the CIA, was assigned to liquidate each member of the team and dispose of the bodies. The attack went successfully, but the team's suspicion of "the Yards" foiled the betrayal. Using their knowledge of "escape and evasion" tactics, the team decided to trek to the Vietnamese border and back to safety with US forces.

Casualties thinned out their numbers until only eight of them remained. Soon these, too, were captured by NVA regulars and underwent hideous torture at the hands of Chinese and Russian interrogators. Ultimately, only Tatum and one other team member survived the ordeal.

Convalescing, Tatum was debriefed by CIA station chief, William Colby, and told he would, in future, be kept close to "the Agency". Recruited into the CIA, the yawning door of future "black" operations creaked open. Life would never be the same again for Chip Tatum.

CIA DEEP-COVER AGENT

For the next 10 years or so, Tatum's covert activities were varied. For a while, he worked out of Homestead Air Force Base where he was NCIOC of the tower receiver sight and MARS station. This was the base which then-President Nixon used for his frequent visits to the Key Biscayne, Florida, "White House". Much of this period remains obscured behind a thick blanket of classification.

From there, he was stationed in northern Italy, tasked with visiting the border towns of Yugoslavia and Italy. Colby felt that as a young Air Force man, Tatum might be "approached" in these towns for "information". The idea was to make contact with foreign agents and covertly gather information about them and their operations. Later, he was tasked with infiltrating Yugoslavia in order to gather intelligence on potential successors to the then Yugoslavian President Tito.

Tatum was also sent to search for missing US POWs from Vietnam and elsewhere in South-East Asia.

By 1976, Tatum was operating out of Lamar, Colorado, in a communications facility called OLAB. His contact there was Don Holmes, president of Valley - a Savings Loan Bank. Tatum acted as his courier, shuttling between Lamar and Springfield, Colorado, with transaction files. From there he was transferred to MacDill Air Force Base, Tampa, Florida.

Shortly before his MacDill posting, Tatum received a call from Colby telling him he was resigning his position as Director, Central Intelligence, and recommending Tatum should deactivate his clandestine CIA activities. Colby continued, saying that remaining active without Colby there to protect him might place him in personal "jeopardy", as he had powerful enemies in Washington. This warning referred to Nixon, Kissinger and Haig, and Tatum's role in and survival from "Operation Red Rock".

Tatum took good notice of the warning and became deactive. Later, in 1979, he requested and was granted entry into a USAF Reserve program. Leaving active military service he moved to Gunnison, Colorado, and took up a position with Bo Calloway, owner of the Crested Butte ski area. The appointment was arranged by Colby.

During 1980 he received a visit from two men who informed him he was being reactivated, but into the US Army instead of the Air Force. He was sent to the US Army Flight School for rotary-wing training at Fort Rucker. From there he was assigned to the 160th Aviation Battalion/Special Forces at Fort Campbell, Kentucky. Shortly afterwards, the 160th combined with others to form Task Force 160.

It was in this unit that Tatum played a "spooky" role in the US invasion of Grenada. A photograph of him standing in front of his MD-500 Defender gunship on the beach-head in Grenada, appeared along with a feature story in the Louisville Courier-Journal. Tatum will only say of this episode that he "wasn't there", in the same sense that he "wasn't in Cambodia".

At that time he was attached to the US Army's 160th air wing at Fort Campbell. Not only was the Hughes helicopter then not in the Army's inventory, but the 160th didn't officially exist. Jim Malone, of the Louisville Courier-Journal, finds this extraordinary. He has documents showing the 160th was stationed at Fort Campbell, even though officials in the Pentagon continue to deny it - as they deny the wing's role in Grenada. Malone, in a telephone conversation with this writer, advised that the 160th is now stationed at Fort Bragg, North Carolina - home of the famous Special Forces, the Green Berets. Their mission is to fly "Delta teams" on covert assignments, Malone added.

THE CONTRA COCAINE TRAIN

During 1983, Colby established contact again, advising Tatum he would shortly be contacted by "a man called North". This, as Tatum was to discover later, was none other than Lt Col. Oliver North - the central architect of America's Nicaraguan Contra campaign. Besides fighting a covert war, North was also the link-man in much, much dirtier work.

The "Contragate" years teem with well-documented accounts of illicit wholesale gun-running and dope-smuggling. The expose series published in Autumn 1996 by the San Jose Mercury-Post, entitled "The Dark Alliance", openly fingerprints at the CIA and the Reagan administration for turning a blind eye to massive cocaine smuggling. Moreover, the series of articles claims that the explosion of "crack cocaine" in Los Angeles resulted entirely from the Contra leaders-cum-dope peddlers who made vast personal fortunes from their activities. Today, the official argument remains that the Contras were "freelancing" without the knowledge or consent of their CIA "handlers" or North's so-called "Enterprise". Despite these assertions, mountains of hard evidence point in a different direction. Included in this evidence is an entry from North's own diary which shows his knowledge of cocaine shipments.

In stark contrast to these denials, Tatum says that North's "Enterprise" not only set up the cocaine factories and "ran" the Colombian cartels, but was also responsible for masterminding the massive shipments of narcotics into the US. Significantly, he is not alone in making these accusations. A number of those involved in Col. North's operations have subsequently come forward and spilled the beans. Almost all of these "whistleblowers" have been hounded and imprisoned. Some have died, whilst others have fled. The whole Contra thing, Tatum states, was also being used by an extremely covert group called Pegasus.

During February 1985, Tatum was piloting "Dustoff" (Medevac) flights for the US Army's 3/498th Medical Company, stationed at Fort Stewart, Georgia. Two flight crews, including Tatum's, were transferred to Palmerola Air Base, Honduras. Each flight consisted of a pilot, co-pilot, medic and crew chief. Once familiarised, they assumed the Medevac mission for Joint Task Force Bravo. Previously, in 1984, Tatum infiltrated the 3/498th on the instructions of Lt Col. Oliver North who had established contact under the code-name "Jake" (North had "control" of the 160th air wing and was also deeply involved with the tactical planning of "black ops" missions in the Grenada invasion).

On 15 February 1985, during a flight to La Ceiba, Honduras, he was instructed to contact his local "handler", Major Felix Rodriguez - later to prove a major figure in the Iran-Contra investigation. Rodriguez informed Tatum that in addition to his Army "Medevac" duties he was to support covert "Pegasus" missions. These, he was told, would take priority over his other duties. He was also given his "chain of command": three individuals, any of whom could authorise Pegasus missions.

In addition to Oliver North and Felix Rodriguez, Tatum would henceforward take orders from Amiram Nir, a former Mossad agent and advisor to Vice President Bush. Aviation support for Pegasus missions operated out of Ilopango Air Base, Honduras (home of the CIA proprietary airline Corporate Air Services) plus numerous Contra camps located in the jungles and mountains along the Honduras-Nicaragua border. A common feature of all future Pegasus missions was the transport "of large white coolers in and out of the Contra camps".

On 26 February 1985, Tatum and his crew were instructed to fly two individuals to one of the larger Contra camps on the Honduran border. His flight log lists the names of the two individuals as Bill Cooper and Buzz Sawyer, both of whom worked for Corporate Air Services. Following a meeting between the CIA agents and Contra leaders, Tatum was given a sealed cooler, marked "Vaccine", weighing approximately 200 pounds, and instructed to deliver it to a USAF C-130 transport plane at La Mesa Airport, Honduras. Two crew members offloading the cooler accidentally dropped it, breaking the seal. Inside were over 100 bags of cocaine. Tatum resealed the cooler and later watched as it was transferred aboard the C-130, outward bound for Panama.

On his return to Palmerola Air Base, Honduras, Tatum phoned Col. North to advise him of his discovery. North replied that it was "a trophy of war" and that the "Sandinistas are manufacturing cocaine and selling it to fund the military". North closed the conversation by saying that "the cocaine was bound for the world courts as evidence" against the Sandinistas.

The whole incident struck Tatum as odd and reminded him strongly of earlier missions dating back to 1983-84 when he was stationed at Fort Campbell, Kentucky, as a Special Operations pilot. Regularly he would trans-ship white coolers, marked as "Medical Supplies", to Little Rock Air Force Base, Arkansas. On two occasions he carried similar coolers to Mena Airport, Arkansas. Deliveries of medical coolers to Little Rock AFB were picked up by Dr Dan Lasater - a close confidant of the then Arkansas Governor Bill Clinton.

By now, almost two years later, Tatum had decided to document his discovery to safeguard his "retirement". Thereafter, he documented all Pegasus flights on the reverse of his flight logs.

This was a difficult time for Tatum, since he had three balls to juggle at the same time. On the one hand he was flying classified active-duty missions for the US Army; on the other, he was flying CIA missions arranged through Mil. Group A (CIA), located at the embassy in Tegucigalpa, Honduras; and thirdly, he was flying Pegasus missions under the control of William Colby, Oliver North and George Bush following his recruitment into Pegasus by Colby in 1986.

Tatum completed numerous missions during his rotation out of Honduras. Picking up and trans-shipping coolers containing cocaine was a regular event. Extraordinarily, this included infiltrating Nicaraguan airspace (Tatum says it was not difficult to infiltrate any country and that "foreign powers" would kill to know how it is done), and landing at Bluefields Air Base with deliveries for placement aboard civilian C-123s and C-130s. This mission was followed by a brief stint in Colombia, where he was assigned to assist the Drug Enforcement Administration's "War on Drugs", only to discover the DEA was heavily engaged in narcotics trafficking.

THE "BOSS HOG" LIST

One of the most flamboyant individuals involved in the cocaine trail from Columbia through Honduras to Panama and on into the United States, was Barry Seal. Seal flew an assortment of aircraft, offloading shipments of weapons in South America and picking up deliveries of cocaine for his return flight to the US on behalf of Col. North's Enterprise. His primary base of operations was Mena Airport, Arkansas.

A CIA "asset", Seal was later arrested and became a DEA informer. Prior to his killing in 1986 - allegedly by a Medellin cartel assassination squad in revenge for informing on them - Seal openly boasted he had information that implicated high-level government officials, including then-Vice President Bush, in the Enterprise's narcotics-trafficking business.

Tatum would soon get to meet Barry Seal and become close friends. Tatum recalls being present during a meeting between Oliver North, Felix Rodriguez, Amiram Nir and General Alvarez from Honduras, when North stated that Vice President Bush was going to have his son Jeb arrange "something out of Columbia". This conversation focused on Barry Seal's increasingly notorious activities. When Tatum later heard Seal had died, he immediately understood who was behind the killing. The discussion also made it clear that VP Bush, Governor Clinton and his three respective "handlers" were knee-deep in the cocaine venture and making fistloads of money.

Unknown to all those present, Seal had earlier provided Tatum with a list of names of those high-level government officials deeply involved with or responsible for controlling the narcotics business. Seal called them the "Boss Hogs". Tatum has kept this list a tightly-held secret until recent weeks. The list cites the surnames only, and is reproduced below, as I received it, complete with misspellings as written. I have appended their full names and titles in brackets.

"BOSS HOGS" ; UNITED STATES

Casey (William Casey, Director Central Intelligence)

Clair-George (Clair Elroy George, Head of CIA's Central American Task Force)

Bush (Vice President George Bush)

Kissinger (Dr Henry Kissinger, Chairman, Kissinger Associates; former US Secretary of State; former National Security Adviser)
Haig (General Alexander Haig, former Secretary of State)

Greg (Donald Gregg, former National Security Adviser to VP Bush, Ambassador to Korea and alleged joint "Controller" of Panama's Manuel Noriega, along with William Casey)

Clairage (Duane "Dewey" Clarradage, CIA)
Fernandez (Joseph Fernandez, CIA Costa Rica Station Chief)

North (Lt Col. Oliver North, National Security Council aide)

Singlaub (John Singlaub, CIA covert operator)

Colby (William Colby, Director Central Intelligence, 1973-76)

Secord (Richard V. Secord, regarded as a "brilliant" CIA black operative)

Weld (William Weld, head of Criminal Division, US Department of Justice; instrumental in "blocking" Senate investigations into narcotics, according to testimony of former Senate special investigator, Jack Blum)

Rodriguez (Felix Rodriguez, CIA officer with close connection to VP Bush)

Peroot (General Peroot, Defense Intelligence Agency)

Most, if not all of these names are readily familiar to Contragate investigators and journalists covering this story. Allegations regarding the involvement of former President George Bush in the cocaine business are by no means new - they abound in plentiful supply. The fact that Bush pardoned a number of his closest advisors, who were facing criminal prosecution and possible imprisonment, late on Christmas Eve 1992, just weeks before Bill Clinton's inauguration, left a sour taste in the mouths of many. If prosecuted, they clearly would have fingered the President himself.

PEGASUS: DIRTY MONEY LAUNDERING

But Tatum's story takes us even further along the dark road of power, greed and corruption. During 1986, he had left Honduras and set up a money-laundering business in Watertown, New York State, close to the home base of the Army's 10th Mountain Division at Fort Drum. The location was chosen with care. With access to Fort Drum's telephone lines for secure communications, he was assigned a Cherokee-140 fixed-wing aircraft, used to ship personnel and supplies across the Canadian border under radar cover. His tenure with these companies lasted from 1986 through to 1990. This was a pure Pegasus operation.

It was at Watertown that Tatum was provided with a civilian cover in the form of three construction companies: American National Home Builders, American Constructors and American Homes. Funding was provided by Henry Hyde, an Illinois Republican politician and well known as the CIA's "black money" man. Hyde provided a US$250,000 line of credit with Key Bank, Watertown. Although Tatum was listed as the president in all three companies, in reality all were under the control of Ben Whittaker, a lawyer from Rochester, New York. Whittaker, Tatum says, is closely associated with Tony Wilson of the Wilson family who owned Xerox Corporation. They are extremely wealthy and "friends of the Rothschilds and Rockefellers". In addition, he was also closely associated with South Eastern US Investment Group (SEUS) - an investment bank in Savannah, Georgia - from 1985 through to 1989. Another proprietary he was involved with was Irving Place Development, a service organisation of Irving Bank and Trust Company. Cocaine proceeds were laundered through these companies by an ingenious use of construction loans.

In response to a question asking why the "drug-related money" was placed in "Arkansas, Colorado and Ohio", Tatum simply explains that he doesn't know why, adding that "It was being done before I got there. I assume banking laws and whether or not Bush had people in his pocket in these areas." He does explain that the primary figure involved in the laundry exercise in Arkansas was "Jack Stephens". Jackson Stephens, owner of Worthen Bank Trust Company, is closely aligned with President Bill Clinton. Tatum states that "...Clinton received the cash and divided it up between Stephens and [Dan] Lasater to clean it up. Stephens' company [Worthen Bank] was used as the guarantor, providing 'warehouse' lines of credit."

Developing this theme in more detail, Tatum explains that the Enterprise was receiving drugs in exchange for the guns they supplied to the Contras. The raw product in the form of coca leaves was supplied by the Colombians and pressed into large tube-shaped bales and then shipped to Nicaragua and Honduras. The "product" was pre-sold and the delivery into the US "guaranteed".

This eventually resulted in the sale proceeds being pre-paid to Panama, under Noriega's control. Some of this money was washed through banks and other companies operating in Panama and elsewhere.

The rest was sent to Arkansas, Ohio and Colorado. Thereafter, the dirty money was filtered via construction loans with permanent "takeouts" "arranged by banks and mortgage-lenders". These, in turn, were later sold to Fannie Mae's and Freddie Mac's - negotiable US Federal Mortgage Securities that are traded globally on a daily basis. Each laundry "cycle" lasted from six months to a year. The result was dirty money transformed into good, clean, US currency.

This system wasn't arbitrary or accidental. One initial "test-bed" was a small residential mortgage lender named Carl I. Brown (CIB) in Kansas. Others were larger, and still others became national. All were ultimately destined to be purchased by a bank (proprietary) from Japan within a specific time-frame, 1996, as part of ongoing Pegasus plans. Eric Brown, the son of the founder of CIB, was heavily involved in these activities. Three additional companies were involved, to Tatum's knowledge: US Homes, Pulte Homes and Richmond Homes. All became very successful, providing "the American dream - as VP Bush put it in a meeting in 1987".

PEGASUS: ASSASSINATION & NEUTRALISATION

Tatum has gone into considerable additional detail regarding the role of Pegasus as he knew it. He believes Pegasus was established during the Eisenhower years as a secret group inside the CIA to spy on that agency on behalf of the President. At some point - believed to be after the assassination of President Kennedy - Pegasus went AWOL from direct US Government control and came under the direction of an international Board of Directors which Tatum alleges now includes George Bush and Henry Kissinger.

The directors of Pegasus meet once a year in secret conclave following G7 meetings. The group has "representation" from a number of intelligence agencies throughout the world. Included are the US Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA), the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA), the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms (ATF) as well as agents from British, Israeli, Turkish and Danish Intelligence plus "others who performed various functions for Pegasus". The mission of Pegasus, Tatum explains, is "to 'align' world leaders and financiers to our [US] policies and standards".

One of Tatum's Pegasus duties included flying "Archer Teams" (four-man hit teams) in his helicopter to their insertion point. He states that Enrique Bermudez was assassinated in 1991 by a Pegasus team, adding he "was shot in the back of the head while walking down the street...from about 150 yards". Bermudez, known as "Commander Three Eight Zero" was the senior Contra leader. Tatum received two broken ribs when he came under small-arms fire during the assassination.

Following the Nicaraguan war, Bermudez sought a prominent position in the new government. Spurned by President Chamorro, "Commander 380" tried to pressure George Bush to intercede on his behalf, threatening to expose Bush's role in the cocaine trafficking enterprise. According to Tatum, Bush ordered his disposal.

Another Pegasus assassination was that of General Gustavo (Dr Gus) Alvarez Martinez, the "cooperating" Armed Forces Commander-in-Chief, Honduras. Alvarez was assassinated in 1989, following his demand for a bigger split of the cocaine profits.

Tatum also describes his involvement in the assassination of Amiram Nir, the former Israeli Mossad agent who went under the assumed name of Pat Weber. Nir was scheduled to testify to the Senate subcommittee and it was feared he would reveal the truth. He perished, following the shooting-down of his aircraft with missiles from Tatum's helicopter.

Other "neutralisations" verge on the bizarre. An individual who must remain nameless for a variety of reasons - but whose name is known to this writer - underwent an experience that is both horrific and chilling. Readers are warned that what follows is not at all pleasant. For the sake of ease, I shall call this individual "Mr X" or, simply, "X".

Mr X was a leader of one of the largest CIA-backed Contra groups. He recently testified before the US Senate Intelligence Committee. Formerly, X was a senior executive in a South American subsidiary of a leading US soft drinks corporation. During his Senate testimony, he denied any knowledge of CIA involvement in the narcotics trade, adding that condoning such activity would have been foreign to his way of life. Not so, says Tatum. Mr X had been recruited into the CIA by then-Director William Casey, with the assistance of Oliver North.

In 1990, when Nicaraguan leader Daniel Ortega announced there would be "free elections", X was ecstatic. He began jostling for position and asked President Bush to ensure he be given a prominent position in the new government - in return for his years of toil at the behest of the CIA and the Enterprise. The pressure came in a form that Bush could not ignore. Failure to help his friend would result in X's intimate knowledge of Bush's involvement in the dope trade being made public. His threat left Bush with a sour taste. A Pegasus team was assigned to "neutralise" him in early 1990.

Mr X, Tatum states, "fancied himself a lover of women. Tall, large-breasted blondes were his favourite. It was determined that, if effectively neutralised, [X] could be an asset. Therefore, it was decided that intimidation would be used to control [X]."

They chose to use the drug Scopolamine, which also went by the nickname "Burundanga" or "the Voodoo drug". The drug is extracted from the pods of a flowering shrub that grows in remote regions of South America. In its processed, powdered form, Scopolamine is "void of smell, void of taste". When properly administered "it causes absolute obedience" without this being "observable by others". Importantly, the target will not recall any of the events that occurred during the period they were under the spell of the drug.

In outlining these details, Tatum adds that it is important to administer the drug in the correct dosage, for he has known targets to die from too high a dose. Others have "remained under the influence of Burundanga for up to three weeks". Precise dosage can be achieved by liquid ingestion, the powder being readily soluble. Ingestion via cigarettes is also an optimum method of ingestion. It is fast-acting and takes no more than 20 minutes to work.

Tatum states that X was invited to spend a relaxing weekend at a luxury hotel as a guest of his friend George Bush. His host for the weekend was a trusted 18-year veteran field-intelligence officer. The evening started with cocktails and was followed by a fine meal. "Nothing but the best" were the orders."

Following the meal, he was ushered into the suite of a "blonde bombshell" supplied by the CIA. Mr X had already ingested a dose of Burundanga during pre-dinner cocktails. X was gallant with the blonde as they both moved into the bedroom where video cameras were already set up in one corner. In short order, the blonde had X standing naked in front of her and began to indulge his desires. All the while, the video cameras whirled. Slowly stripping off, the "blonde" revealed his manhood in all its glory. Mr X was instructed to reciprocate the favour and perform fellatio. He obliged, his intimate activities recorded at 24 frames a second on videotape.

Tatum says the male prostitute was hired from a bar in New York and killed that same evening.

Two weeks later, X - wholly unaware of the events of that evening - was visited in Nicaragua. He was presented with a copy of the video footage, along with instructions. Tatum says that X can never allow that video to be seen: "Not only does it reveal his homosexuality, but it also reveals his bestiality and satanic worship rituals." As frame after frame flicked by, X reportedly wept, forced to watch himself kill his homosexual "lover" and then engage in the most grisly cannibalistic ritual imaginable.

Neutralised, Mr X became a leading member of the Nicaraguan government a few short weeks later.

PLANNING FOR RETIREMENT

Since 1985, when he first became aware of the Enterprise drug-smuggling, Tatum began collecting documents, audiotapes and videotapes for his "retirement". He was acutely aware that most deep-cover agents do not survive long in what is a very dirty game at a high-stakes poker table.

Tatum says that, in 1992, President Bush instructed him to "neutralise" presidential runner Ross Perot, but he refused to do so. Tatum turned over a copy of an incriminating tape to President Bush, explaining that it would not be released - providing that he, his family and Perot were kept safe. He also told the President that copies of the tape had been placed in six different locations worldwide, saying, "if I didn't contact these capsule-holders by a certain time each year, they are to be sent to the addresses on the packaging". He closed the conversation by stating that when he originally "placed the packages, I gave explicit instructions that if I asked for them to be sent back to me, they were to send them to the addresses on the packages." This, Tatum reasoned, would avoid intimidation or torture.

Part 2 of David Guyatt's article will cover George Bush's "scope and mission" paper for the New World Order; Chip Tatum's run-down on the counterfeit "Super Bills" CIA scam in Iran; the truth behind the killing of cocaine king Pablo Escobar; the reasons for the US invasion of Panama; the truth behind ex-DCI William Colby's death; more revelations about Clinton's cocaine confidants; and more "Boss Hogs".

To be continued in the next issue of the Free American.

About the Author:

Born in England, David Guyatt is a freelance investigative journalist whose former career in stockbroking and banking gave him the background that inspired his research into the shady world of international weapons financing, drug-running and money laundering.

His current research interests are focused on military/intelligence mind-control programs and non-lethal weapons systems, as well as the hidden influence of elitist groups around the globe.

Clarifications: Tatum has provided me with a variety of documents covering his military and CIA career from 1971 through 1986 when he was discharged from the US Army. His discharge papers outline a series of military decorations and campaign medals including "The Republic of Vietnam Campaign Medal with Device" and the "Vietnam Service Medal" (there are many others). Appended to these papers is a medical report, signed by Major Charlie Talbert, which outlines Tatum's various injuries gained during his military career and includes notations describing his capture and torture in South-East Asia. Major Talbert reports that these injuries were treated in June 1972, and adds that Tatum's medical records are incomplete "as details on this are classified". I queried Tatum on the date, which should have been recorded as 1971. He responded, saying it was definitely 1971 and that the Army doctor only had "Secret" security clearance whereas Tatum had "Top Secret" clearance (confirmed in other military records, dated 1972, in my possession). Tatum avers that this discrepancy was the result of a typographical mistake on the part of the Army doctor. Moreover, Tatum's covert role in the CIA is additionally confirmed by other military papers provided to me. In one dated 1974, Tatum's assignment orders were "cut" by a Lt General USAF (name redacted) who was Chief Military Intelligence Adviser to the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

Other corroborative documents in my possession include a US Army payslip dated 1985; a copy of an "Inmate Request Form" on the Hillsborough County Sheriff's Office, showing Tatum was being detained on a "treason" charge; assignment papers to the 3/498th Medac at Fort Campbell, dated 12 April 1984; copies of media news articles describing the attack on Phnom Penh; a news report and photograph of Tatum in Grenada; a Special Forces USA MEDDAC Mission Request Form dated 6 April 1985, detailing Barry Seal's "Boss Hogs" listing; plus hard copies of Tatum's flight logs during his Honduras "rotation", additionally supported by photographs of the original flight logs.

I also have a copy of a TWIX message from the Commander US Forces, Honduras (Task Force Bravo), stating to his superiors that "It has become increasingly evident during the past six weeks that Medevac A/C, in direct support of JTFs, in some cases are being utilised for other than Medevac requirements and are being controlled by other than Medevac Officials." Tatum says he obtained a copy of this message from his Pegasus controller.

I also have a copy of Tatum's full book manuscript, "Operation Red Rock", together with a letter he sent to William Colby, dated 6 March 1996, which threaten: "I will not only write about the missions but about the NWO timetable and planned events, including a chronology. And I will name names."

The Franklin Cover-up

The shut-down of Omaha, Nebraska's Franklin Community Federal Credit Union, raided by federal agencies in November 1988, sent shock waves all the way to Washington, D.C. $40 million was missing. The credit union's manager: Republican Party activist Lawrence E. "Larry" King, Jr., behind whose rise to fame and riches stood powerful figures in Nebraska politics and business, and in the nation's capital.

In the face of opposition from local and state law enforcement, from the FBI, and from the Powerful Omaha World-Herald newspaper, a special Franklin committee of the Nebraska Legislature launched its own probe. What looked like a financial swindle, soon exploded into a hideous tale of drugs, Iran-Contra money-laundering, a nationwide child abuse ring, and ritual murder.

Nineteen months later, the legislative committee's chief investigator died—suddenly, and violently, like more than a dozen other people linked to the Franklin case.

Author John DeCamp knows the Franklin scandal from the inside. In 1990, his "DeCamp memo" first publicly named the alleged high-ranking abusers. Today, he is attorney for two of the abuse victims.

Using documentation never before made public, DeCamp lays bare not only the crimes, but the cover-up—a textbook case of how dangerous the corruption of institutions of government, and the press, can be. In its sweep and in what it portends for the nation, the Franklin cover-up followed the ugly precedent of the Warren Commission.

WHAT WOULD YOU DO?

What would you and your family do if one of you fell and fractured a leg while hiking in the mountains? What if you were bitten by a rattlesnake? Did you know that ordinary household laundry bleach can be used as a preventative medicine? Did you know that cayenne pepper sprinkled on a wound will stop bleeding and promote healing?

Emergency medical treatment must sometimes be given someone when no trained professionals are on hand. THE OFFICIAL POCKET MEDICAL SURVIVAL MANUAL was specifically designed for such a situation. Keep a copy of THE OFFICIAL POCKET MEDICAL SURVIVAL MANUAL in your home and another in the glove compartment of your vehicle. It can even be carried in your shirt pocket, slipped down in your boot, or in a backpack. Every hunter should carry a copy when out trekking through the woods. The same is true of fishermen, scouts, hikers, back-packers, campers, those in the military and a multitude of others.

CHEQUE MATE

THE GAME OF PRINCES

The Stakes Are High...The Results Are Final...
The New World Order and
One World Government

In Cheque Mate The Game of Princes, author Jeffrey A. Baker contends that there is a plan for a one world government and the evidence presented is beyond credible—it's compelling!

The One World "Game"

Baker not only cites names, places, and dates, he also reveals the "game" these "Princes" of power and intrigue are playing in order to establish a New World Order. You'll learn how this select group is working behind the scenes, using you, your job, the economy, the political system, and the future of this country as pawns in their global game.

Who Are the Players?

You'll find out in this intriguing book as Baker reveals how their tentacles reach from the Federal Reserve to the Central Banks of every major and rising nation around the world; from the halls of Congress to other addresses on Pennsylvania Avenue; from the boardrooms of multi-national corporations to the classrooms and even the pulpits of America.

Their Secret Weapon

But you'll discover the most frightening aspect of all: the secret weapon that they plan to use to "slam dunk" America into the New World Order.

SET UP & SOLD OUT

The Facts Will Amaze You..

This book reveals a staggering number of shocking connections between the Green movement and the Communist movement.

"The environmental movement promises to bring greater numbers into our orbit than the peace movement ever did." - Carl Bloice, Leading US Communist, MIA, March, 1995.

"This is true in the struggle to save the environment....we must be the; organizers, the leaders of these movements...Human society cannot basically stop the destruction of the environment under capitalism. Socialism is the only structure that makes it possible." -Gus Hall, CPUSA-Ecology 1972

Gus Hall, is now the National Chairman of the US Communist Party.

Learn why... Mikhail Gorbachev is involved in the Green movement and why he has the support of U.S. environmental groups. Look into the secret side of environmental politics; who is involved and at what level.

A valuable and unparalleled resource. . .

This thought provoking work raises disturbing and valid questions about the true agenda of the Greens. It will leave you feeling intrigued, violated, enlightened and hungry for more.

Author's Note...

"If we are too afraid to discuss the 'C' word, the Communists have successfully made it politically correct to submit to their program. This is not about environmental protection. We all support that.

This is about making distinctions and choosing our future."

Regardless of your politics, your occupation or your income; you need to know how this will affect you and what you can do about it.

HOW AMERICANS CAN BUY AMERICAN

By Roger Simmermaker

Do you know who owns our restaurants, hotels, supermarkets and department stores? The answers to these questions determine where the profits go, where the taxes are paid, and which national economy benefits.

How Americans Can Buy American clears the confusion of who owns what on a wide range of products and services, so we can combine buying American-made with American-owned. This will help keep profits and jobs within our borders, strengthen American companies and the American economy, and help restore national sovereignty.

The Bible Code

by Michael Drosnin

Simon & Schuster, 1997

Hardcover, $25.00

ISBN: 0-684-81079-4

Non Fiction

For three thousand years a code in the Bible has remained hidden. Now it has been unlocked by computer — and it may reveal our future.

The code was broken by an Israeli mathematician, who presented the proof in a major science journal, and it has been confirmed by famous mathematicians around the world.

This book is the first full account of a scientific discovery that may change the world, told by a skeptical secular reporter who became part of the story.

The three-thousand-year-old Bible code foretells events that happened thousands of years after the Bible was written. It foresaw both Kennedy assassinations, the Oklahoma City bombing, the election of Bill Clinton — everything from World War II to Watergate, from the Holocaust to Hiroshima, from the Moon landing to the collision of a comet with Jupiter.

In a few dramatic cases detailed predictions were found in advance — and the events then happened exactly as predicted. The date the Gulf War would begin was found weeks before the war started. The date of the Jupiter collision was found months before the blast. The author of this book, investigative reporter Michael Drosnin, himself found the assassination of Yitzhak Rabin predicted in the Bible more than a year before the murder — and personally warned the Prime Minister.

After the assassination happened, as predicted, when predicted, he was asked to brief the new Prime Minister of Israel and the chief of its famed intelligence agency, the Mossad.

The book is based on Drosnin's five-year investigation. The author interviewed all the experts, here and abroad. He spent many weeks with the world-class mathematician who discovered the code, Dr. Eliyahu Rips, and he met with famous mathematicians at Harvard, Yale, and Hebrew University. He talked to a senior code breaker at the top secret U.S. National Security Agency, who confirmed that there is a code in the Bible that does reveal the future.

No one yet knows if the Bible code accurately foretells what is yet to come. But the code may be a warning to this world of unprecedented danger, perhaps the real Apocalypse, a nuclear World War. In any event, the Bible code forces us to accept what the Bible itself can only ask us to believe — that we are not alone.

And it raises a question for us all — does the code describe an inevitable future, or a series of possible futures whose ultimate outcome we can still decide?

Excerpt From Chapter 1

On September 1, 1994, I flew to Israel and met in Jerusalem with a close friend of Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin, the poet Chaim Guri. I gave him a letter which he immediately gave to the Prime Minister.

"An Israeli mathematician has discovered a hidden code in the Bible that appears to reveal the details of events that took place thousands of years after the Bible was written," my letter to Rabin stated.

"The reason I'm telling you about this is that the only time your full name <Yitzhak Rabin — is encoded in the Bible, the words 'assassin that will assassinate' cross your name.

"That should not be ignored, because the assassinations of Anwar Sadat and both John and Robert Kennedy are also encoded in the Bible — in the case of Sadat with the first and last names of his killer, and the date of the murder, and the place, and how it was done.

"I think you are in real danger, but that the danger can be averted."

On November 4, 1995, came the awful confirmation, a shot in the back from a man who believed he was on a mission from God, the murder that was encoded in the Bible three thousand years ago.

The assassination of Rabin is dramatic confirmation of the reality of the Bible code, the hidden text in the Old Testament that reveals the future.

The code was discovered by Dr. Eliyahu Rips, one of the world's leading experts in group theory, a field of mathematics that underlies quantum physics. It has been confirmed by famous mathematicians at Harvard, Yale, and Hebrew University. It has been replicated by a senior code-breaker at the U.S. Department of Defense. It has passed three levels of secular peer review at a leading U.S. math journal.

Rabin's assassination was not the only modern event found. In addition to the Sadat and Kennedy assassinations, hundreds of other world-shaking events are also encoded in the Bible — everything from World War II to Watergate, from the Holocaust to Hiroshima, from the Moon landing to the collision of a comet with Jupiter.

And the Rabin assassination was not the only event found in advance. The Jupiter collision was found, with the exact date of impact, before it happened, and the dates of the Gulf War were found in the Bible before the war started.

It doesn't make ordinary sense in our secular world, and since I am not religious, I would normally be among the first to dismiss it as millennium fever.

But I have known about this for five years. I have spent many weeks with the Israeli mathematician, Dr. Rips. I learned Hebrew, and checked the code on my own computer every day. I talked to the man at the Defense Department, who independently confirmed that the Bible code does exist. And I went to Harvard and Yale and Hebrew University to meet with three of the world's most famous mathematicians. They all confirmed that there is a code in the Bible that reveals the future.

I did not fully believe it until Rabin was killed.

I found the Bible code's prediction of his assassination myself, a clear warning that he would be killed in the Hebrew year that began in late 1995, but never really believed it would happen. When he was killed, as predicted, when predicted, my first thought was, "Oh my God, it's real."

It could not be a coincidence. The words "assassin that will assassinate" cross the name "Yitzhak Rabin" the only time his full name appears in the Old Testament. The Bible code stated he would be killed in the Hebrew year that started in September 1995. Now, on November 4th, he was dead.

Rabin's friend, Chaim Guri, told me it was also the first thing he thought of when the Prime Minister was shot.

"It was like a knife in my heart," said Guri. "I called the chief of staff, General Barak, and said, 'The American reporter, he knew it a year ago, I told the Prime Minister. It was in the Bible.' "

When I first found the Rabin murder encoded, I remembered the first question my book editor had asked me: "What if you had known about the Sadat assassination before it happened? Could you have warned him, and kept it from happening?"

With Rabin, I tried and failed. Before the assassination no one was able to find the name of the gunman, or the exact date. A few days after I first contacted the Prime Minister, Dr. Rips and I met with the chief scientist at the Ministry of Defense, Gen. Isaac Ben-Israel. We searched for details. But only the year of the predicted murder was apparent.

After Rabin was killed, the name of his assassin, "Amir," was immediately found in the Bible code. It was always there, right above Rabin's name, but hidden in plain sight.

"Amir" was encoded in the same place as "Yitzhak Rabin" and "assassin who will assassinate." Moreover, the words "name of the assassin" appeared in the plain text of the Bible in the same verse that the name "Amir" appeared in the hidden text. And also, in that same verse, the hidden text stated, "He struck, he killed the Prime Minister."

He was even identified as an Israeli who shot at close range: "His killer, one of his people, the one who got close."

The code revealed when and where it would happen. "In 5756," the Hebrew year that began in September 1995, crossed both "Tel Aviv" and "Rabin assassination." "Amir" appeared again in the same place.

But before Rabin was killed we knew only that the Bible code predicted his murder "in 5756." And Rabin ignored the warning.

"He won't believe you," his friend Guri had told me when I first gave him the letter. "He's not at all a mystic. And he is a fatalist."

So, I still don't know if the assassination could have been prevented. I only know what I told the Prime Minister in my letter: "No one can tell you whether an event that is encoded is pre-determined, or is only a possibility. My own guess is that it is only a possibility — that the Bible encodes all the probabilities, and what we do determines the actual outcome."

We had not been able to save Rabin's life. But suddenly, brutally, I had absolute proof that the Bible code was real.

MILITARY READINESS

"The Air Force is suffering from pilots who have lost faith in their generals, jet engines that still don't work after repairs and maintenance depots with 'little quality or quantity of work being produced,' according to an internal Defense Department memorandum. The draft memo paints a troubling picture of the state of American air power. 'The sad state of Air Force readiness can be blamed on the Clinton administration, which treats the military as a toy to be deployed for meals-on-wheels-type missions without due consideration for its impact on readiness,' said Robert Maginnis, a retired Army lieutenant colonel and an analyst at the conservative Family Research Council."

BOOK REVIEW

The Franklin Cover-Up: Child Abuse, Satanism and Mud.: in Nebraska
(second edition) by John DeCamp
411 pages. paperbound. $9.95
Nebraska pedophile scandal is re-opened, with new revelations

On the morning of July 11, 1990, this reporter was present in Nebraska State Senator Loran Schmit's office in the capitol building in Lincoln. The occasion was an interview I was conducting with him on what had become infamous as "the Franklin case." named after a small credit union in Omaha and for which Schmit chaired the Senate's investigative committee. He took a phone call, listened for a minute or two, and said, "Oh, my God. My God. How did it happen?" Profoundly shaken, with tears in his eyes, he turned to try to continue the interview.

"What is the matter, Senator?" I asked. "Gary's dead," he replied. "His plane blew up on the way back from Chicago early this morning." "Gary" was Gary Caradori, a former state trooper and then a dedicated investigator for Senator Schmit's Franklin Committee. Caradori was investigating leads in Chicago, and had taken his eight-year-old son A.J., who was also in the plane when it exploded, to see the all-star baseball game there. I was, through other contacts, to have met Caradori shortly after his return.

Senator Schmit continued. "He called me before he left, very excited, and said. 'We've got them now. We've got the hard evidence.' Gary used to tell me, 'It's unlikely that they would kill me or you. Loran, because that would be too obvious I warned him to be careful, particularly with his private plane.'"

In 1992, Senator Schmit's longtime associate and personal lawyer, former Nebraska State Senator John DeCamp, wrote a book about the Franklin investigation. Its back cover summarized the stakes which led to the murder of Caradori and his son:

"The shutdown of Omaha, Nebraska's Franklin Community Federal Credit Union, raided by federal agencies in November 1988, sent shock waves all the way to Washington, D.C. $40 million was missing. The credit union's manager: Republican Party activist, Lawrence E. 'Larry' King, Jr., behind whose rise to fame and riches stood powerful figures in Nebraska politics and business, and in the nation's capital.

"In the face of opposition from local and state law enforcement, from the FBI, and from the powerful Omaha World-Herald newspaper, a special Franklin Committee of the Nebraska Legislature launched its own probe. What looked like a financial swindle, soon exploded into a hideous tale of drugs, Iran-Contra, money-laundering, a nationwide child abuse ring, and ritual murder. Nineteen months later the legislative committee's chief investigator died suddenly and violently, like more than a dozen other people linked to the Franklin case."

The original edition of The Franklin Cover-Up sold 50,000 copies - an astonishing number for a self-published book - without the benefit of a single penny of advertising. Now, almost four and a half years later, DeCamp has issued a second edition. With 116 new pages comprised of eight chapters and an epilogue, the second edition is almost two books in one: the new "Part II" indeed contains, as the book's cover proclaims, "new, startling revelations."

George Bush and Franklin

In the first three chapters of Part II, DeCamp provides fascinating raw material to back up his original assertions. material which comes from sources as diverse as Msgr. Robert Hupp, the former president of Boys Town in Omaha (some of whose residents were abused), to a British television investigative team, which spent months in Nebraska: to a compelling affidavit from victim-witness Troy Boner, on how the FBI terrorized him into recanting his story.

In addition, two other cases which have come to light since the first edition, may also help explain why so many dead bodies turned up in the Franklin case; that of the Contra-cocaine apparatus, made famous by the San Jose Mercury News series of Aug- 18-20, 1996: and that of a high-level Satanism/pedophile ring in Belgium, revelations about which have provoked the largest street demonstration in that country's history.

Immediately after the FBI raided Franklin in 1988, rumors swept Nebraska that the "real story" behind Franklin was that Larry King was laundering tens of millions of dollars for the Contras: DeCamp's first edition showed that King was deeply involved with the Contra support apparatus, that he was an associate of George Bush (who was elected President just days before Franklin was raided), and that children victim-witnesses had repeatedly mentioned Bush's name. After summarizing some new evidence, DeCamp now asks, "So, was Larry King's buddy George Bush the country's 'drug king-pin, in the 1980s? I don't know. But what I do know, is that if Bush were running the Contra affair, and drugs were a big part of it, that would certainly jibe 100% with everything known or rumored about Bush, Larry King, and the Franklin Credit Union."

In Belgium, a pedophile ring, involving some of the country's political and judicial leadership, had abused and then ritualistically murdered children. DeCamp believes that the Belgium case is tied to Franklin, though he did not have time to develop that in this second edition: certain shared features of the two cases are highly suggestive.

First of all, high level-pedophile networks are tightly integrated internationally. In the Franklin case, victim-witness Paul Bonacci reported that he was regularly taken to Europe (including to East Germany before the Berlin Wall fell), where he was abused, on board airplanes of the Strategic Air Command, which is based at Offutt Air Force Base in Omaha-a base which is plugged tightly into the NATO apparatus headquartered in Belgium. Ritualistic, satanic activity was a 'marker' for the Franklin case, just as it is for the Belgian one, and the Belgian case overlapped an arms-trafficking ring with possible Contra connections. In addition, freemasonry is a prominent feature of the Belgian ring, just as it was of Franklin: two of the Omaha-based freemasons Caradori investigated have extensive connections in Europe.

Senator John W. DeCamp

The U.S. Justice Department: Murder, Inc.

As a result of the circulation of the original book, DeCamp became a lawyer for Yorie Kahl, the son of Midwestern farmer-activist Gordon Kahl. In a chapter entitled 'The U.S. Justice Department Murder of Gordon Kahl,' based on Kahl's never-released diary, and his son's affidavit, DeCamp recalls the chilling case of how the Justice Department systematically set out to Murder Kahl. After an initial shoot-out in which Yorie, who had traded jackets with his father hours earlier, was severely wounded, the Department of Justice conducted a months-long manhunt, at the end of which Gordon was slaughtered in Arkansas.

In addition to physical murder, DeCamp shows, the Department of Justice attempted a political murder, as in the targeting of black politicians (the Fruhmenschen cases); the case of retired Cleveland auto worker, John Demjanjuk (whom the Department of Justice claimed was the Nazi concentration camp guard "Ivan the Terrible" at a time when it had proof he was not); and the case of Lyndon LaRouche. On the last case, DeCamp records his thoughts after reading a small portion of six volumes of evidence proving LaRouche's innocence: I was shocked-no, 'stunned' is a better word, by what I read The U.S. Justice Department had nor a shadow of 'evidence' to convict LaRouche nor any of his associates."

In Memorium: Bill Colby

Former CIA chief William Colby, it emerges in DeCamp's new, concluding chapter, was a key instigator of the Franklin investigation, the person "who constantly pushed DeCamp, who had served under Colby in Vietnam, to continue to fight. As Colby once told DeCamp, "This case is so much bigger than you think. It goes to the very highest levels: we have to keep pulling the strings."

In addition to the Franklin case, Colby also urged DeCamp to continue his legal work with the militias, another result of the wide circulation of the book's first edition, DeCamp's work in avoiding a potentially lethal government- versus-militia showdown in Montana, and his deep involvement in investigating the bombing of the Oklahoma City federal building on April 19, 1995, comprise two of the book's new chapters. Colby argued that the militia movement was just the tip of the iceberg of a profound, growing anger by three-quarters of America's citizens against their government, that this was "a very dangerous trend," and that "wires of communication" had to be opened between the government and its citizens.

The book concludes with Colby's mysterious death in April 1996, when his body was recovered from the waters of the Chesapeake Bay, near his vacation home. Rumors spread that he was depressed and had perhaps killed himself. DeCamp spent many hours with Colby in the weeks and months before his death, and shows him to have been highly optimistic and looking forward to travel and new projects. He also notes that one of the projects Colby was involved in at the time of his death, was writing for the Strategic-Investment newsletter of London's Lord William Rees-Mogg and friends- This crowd was deeply involved in attempts so over-throw President Clinton- of whom Colby was a great supporter - in part through manipulating the "patriot movement."

DeCamp also recorded a telling little incident, in "which one of Rees-Mogg's minions, Sunday Telegraph Washington correspondent Ambrose Evans-Pritchard, who has led the attack against the Clinton Presidency for years, had once called DeCamp, demanding a meeting. DeCamp recounted the approach to Colby, whom he saw shortly thereafter. I had never heard of him before," said DeCamp, "and so asked Bill if he had ever heard of this fellow, 'Evans-Prickard, or something.' "Colby replied, "His name is Ambrose Evans-Pritchard. And be very careful."

& The World Wide Web

There is a curious fact about the origin of the Internet- it grew out of thin air. No group masterminded it. In the beginning, it had no planning council or board of directors. In fact, it simply grew out of the need for global communication and availability of computer communications. At first, it was used by academic staffs as an inexpensive communications device between the world's universities. Then business and banking caught on. The rest, as they say, is history.

Soon, a "network" developed. This term, shortened to "net," gave birth to the official name, "Internet." However, hackers and other devotees soon gave it a familiar, colloquial name, "the web."

So the "network" became a "net" which soon became a "web." As it grew, it became the "worldwide web!"

Curiously, this latter designation, rather than its official name, Internet, formed the basis for its address prefix; in other words, "www" for worldwide web. Usually, when you want to contact someone on the internet, you type the three letters "www," followed by a dot, then his specific designator.

It is fascinating that in the international alphabet, the letter "w" for "waw," is used to translate the Hebrew letter vav into the standard Roman alphabet. Vav, the sixth letter of the Hebrew alphabet, represents the number 6. So, in a sense, when you type the three letters "www," you are entering the Hebrew equivalent of "666."

We have all known for a long time that the Antichrist will need a global communications system to carry out his evil schemes. Now, we have one with his initials on it. END

THE DRUG TRADE THE HISTORY

TO SAP THE VITALITY OF A NATION

Excerpted from Dope, Inc.

$16.00

by the editors of

Executive Intelligence Review

P.O. Box 17390

Washington D.C. 20041-0390

This is the setting for what follows below: narcotics are pouring in from abroad through a well-organized, efficient group of smugglers. One-fifth of the population abuses drugs, an epidemic surpassing any known since the Great Plagues. Not only the poor, but the wealthy and the children of the wealthy have succumbed. Within the nation, organized crime displays its drug profits without shame, ruling local governments, and threatening the integrity even of national government. None of their opponents is safe from assassins, not even the chief of state. Law enforcement is in shambles. The moral fiber of the nation has deteriorated past the danger point.

And one of the leading dope-traffickers writes to his superiors abroad, that as long as drug use continues to dominate the country, "there is not the least reason to fear that she will become a military power of any importance, as the habit saps the energies and vitality of the nation."

The familiar description is not of America in 1986, but China in 1838, on the eve of the First Opium War, when Great Britain landed troops to compel China to ingest the poison distributed by British merchants.

During the last century, British finance protected by British guns controlled the world narcotics traffic. The names of the families and institutions are known to the history student: Matheson, Keswick, Swire, Dent, Baring, and Rothschild; Jardine Matheson, the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank, the Chartered Bank, the Peninsular and Orient Steam Navigation Company. Britain's array of intelligence fronts ran a worldwide assassination bureau, operating through occult secret societies: the Order of St. John of Jerusalem, its Zionist branch centered in the Jerusalem Foundation, Mazzini's Mafia, the Triads, or Societies of Heaven in China.

Paging back over the records of the narcotics traffic and its wake of corruption and murder, the most uncanny feature of the opium-based Pax Britannica is how shamelessly, how publicly the dope-runners operated. Opium trading, for the British, was not a sordid backstreet business, but an honored instrument of state policy, the mainstay of the Exchequer, the subject of encomia from Britain's leading apostles of free trade—Adam Smith, David Ricardo, Thomas Malthus, James Mill, and John Stuart Mill. The poisoning of China, and, later, the post-Civil War United States, did not lead to prison but to peerages. Great sectors of the Far East became devoted to the growing of the opium poppy, to the exclusion of food crops, to the extent that scores of millions of people depended utterly on the growing, distribution, and consumption of drugs.

The Keswicks, Dents, Swires, and Barings still control the world flow of opiates from their stronghold in the British Crown Colony of Hong Kong. Jardine Matheson, the Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation, and the Peninsular and Orient Steam Navigation Company still control the channels of production and distribution of the drugs from the Far East, through the British Dominion of Canada, into the United States. By an uninterrupted chain of succession, the descendants of the Triads, the Mafia, and the Hofiuden of the British Chamber of Jewish Deputies still promote drug traffic, dirty money transfers, political corruption, and an assassination bureau that has claimed the life of an American President. Of course, the drug revenues of this machine are no longer tallied in the published accounts of the British Exchequer. But the leading installations of the drug traffic are no more hidden than they were a hundred years ago. From the Crown Colony of Hong Kong, the Hong-Shang bank does what the Keswicks set it up to do: provide centralized rediscounting facilities for the financing of the drug trade. The surnames of senior management are still the same.

Even today, the grand old names of Prohibition liquor and dope-running rouse the deep awareness of Americans: Bronfman, Kennedy, Lansky. Are the denizens of the India opium trade, of the Prohibition mob, imprisoned in the history books and behind the movie screen? Not infrequently, the observer feels a momentary lapse in time, and sees not a history book, but the morning newspaper, not the late-night movie, but the evening television newscast.

The story we have to tell happened twice. It first happened to China, and now it is happening to the United States. Emphasizing that neither the names nor the hangouts of the criminals have changed, we begin by telling how it happened the first time.

The East India Company's War Against China

In 1715, the British East India Company opened up its first Far East office in the Chinese port city of Canton and began trading in opium. Between that time and the First Opium War against China in 1840, Great Britain did not take over the dope trade. The dope trade took over Britain. The vehicle was the 1783 near coup d'état by Lord Shelburne (the British prime minister who concluded peace negotiations with the American colonies after Yorktown), which brought to power in London the financial and political faction that had conducted the Asian opium trade.

Shelburne's ruling combination centered on the East India Company, a group of Scottish merchants, and an alliance on the continent with the chivalric order of the Knights of St. John of Jerusalem and the Society of Jesus. Unable to rule in his own name—he was known as the "Jesuit of Berkelev Saure"—Shelburne wielded the power that kept William Pitt the Younger in the prime ministership for twenty years.

The East India Company had begun its business in dope in 1715, but they were not the first. Since the original Jesuit mission had established itself in Beijing in 1601, the Society of Jesus had held the key to the Far East trade—including the dope trade. The first report of large-scale cultivation of opium came from India, then under the Mogul empire at the end of the sixteenth century, when the Jesuits—following the trail of the first Portuguese traders—had achieved positions of unquestioned authority in the Mogul court.

With the Jesuits as their contact point between the Manchu rulers of China and the Mogul empire, the Portuguese and later the Dutch took over the centuries-old dope-trading routes paved by Arab and Indian traders, including opium trade between Canton, and Portuguese-controlled Macao. The Dutch later negotiated an opium monopoly for the entire northern part of the Indian subcontinent that included Bengal, Bihar, Orissa, and Benares. The Dutch traders were permitted to force-draft Indian peasants to produce opium in exchange for taxes paid to the Mogul court. By 1659, the opium trade had become second only to the trade in spices, for which opium was a medium of exchange. By 1750, the Dutch were shipping more than 100 tons of opium a year to Indonesia.

Opium has always been an extraordinarily lucrative commodity, but the Dutch did not fail to notice its side benefits. According to one historian, the Dutch found "opium a useful means for breaking the moral resistance of Indonesians who opposed the introduction of their semi-serve but increasingly profitable plantation system. They deliberately spread the drug habits from the ports, where Arab traders used opium, to the countryside."

The East India Company remained on the sidelines of this trade until the 1757 military victories that made Bengal a crown colony. But the beneficiary of the new move into the opium trade was not Britain, nor even the company itself. The company had paid the costs of the 1757 military expeditions, but saw none of the profit, as the lucre from the opium trade went to line the pockets of the company's officials in India. Repeatedly, the East India Company had to apply for a parliamentary bailout, until Shelburne moved in, reorganized the company, and made it the central instrument of loot for the maintenance of the British Empire.

Shelburne took two bankrupt entities, the East India Company and the British Empire, and combined them to make a going concern. By the end of the Revolutionary War with the American colonies, Britain's national debt had swollen to the then-stupendous figure of 240 million. Like today's underdeveloped countries, Britain's yearly debt service consumed more than half of all government tax revenues. More serious, through the League of Armed Neutrality, the European alliance that had formed against Britain during the war, England had lost to France most of the European market in staple items such as linens, textiles, and ironware.

To alleviate the crisis, Shelburne proposed a two-pronged strategy: expand the opium traffic and subvert the United States—both under the banner of free trade. The first achieved crowning success with the Chinese Opium War; the second not until the twentieth century.

First, Shelburne struck an alliance with the East India Company faction around Laurence Sullivan, whose son had subcontracted for the private opium monopoly in Bengal, and Francis Baring, the Anglo-Dutch banker prominent in the Atlantic trade. With the money from the opium trade and the monarchy's patronage machine, Shelburne bought the Parliament in 1783 lock, stock, and barrel, and consolidated a financial power that far outweighed the landed families of the 1688 Glorious Revolution that had so bungled British policy toward the American colonies.

Shelburne's chief propagandist was Adam Smith, the paid official of the East India Company, (To whom the U.N. considers their spiritual guide, along with Karl Marx - Human Development 94) whose 1776 tome, "The Wealth of Nations", set forth British policy to maintain the American colonies as backward raw-materials producers and the mandate to expand the opium trade. Smith blasted the East India Company's practice of "ordering a peasant to plough up a rich field of poppies and sow it with rice or some other grain," in order to maintain high opium prices in the existing restricted markets.

Opium was to be transformed from the source of fortunes for a few East India Company officials into the lifeblood of the Empire. Wrote Smith in The Wealth of Nations:

The servants of the company have upon several occasions attempted to establish in their own favour the monopoly of some of the most important branches, not only of the foreign, but of the inland trade of the country.... In the course of a century or two, the policy of the English company would in this manner have probably proved as destructive as that of the Dutch.... Nothing, however, can be more directly contrary to the real interest of those companies considered as the sovereigns of the countries which they have conquered.

... It is in [the sovereign's] interest, therefore, to increase as much as possible that annual produce. But if this is the interest of every sovereign, it is peculiarly so of one whose revenue, like that of the sovereign of Bengal, arises chiefly from a land rent. That rent must necessarily be in proportion to the quantity and value of the produce, and both one and the other must depend upon the extent of the market.

The "produce" was opium.

In 1787, British Secretary of State Dundas had proposed that Britain storm China for the creation of the opium market. The East India Company meanwhile established a set of cutouts, or intermediaries, to conduct the exports of opium from India to China on the Company's covert behalf. Among the first of these was Jardine Matheson, which maintains an active hand in Far East heroin-trafficking to this day. Under the direct sponsorship now of the Crown, Jardine Matheson and others fostered an epidemic of opium-trafficking into China. By the year 1830, the number of chests of opium brought into China increased fourfold, to 18,956 chests. In 1836, the figure exceeded 30,000 chests. In financial terms, trade figures made available by both the British and Chinese governments showed that between 1829 and 1840, a total of 7 million silver dollars entered China, while 56 million silver dollars were sucked out by the soaring rise in opium trade. In fact, by 1830, opium was the largest commodity in world trade.

Britain's Opium Diplomacy

Not a dozen years would pass from the signing of the Treaty of Nanking before the British Crown would precipitate its Second Opium War against China, with similar disastrous consequences for the Chinese and with similar monumental profits for London's drug-pushers. Out of the Second Opium War (1858-1860), the British merchant banks and trading companies established the Hongkong and Shanghai Corporation, which to this day serves as the central clearinghouse for all Far Eastern financial transactions relating to the black market in opium and its heroin derivative. END OF EXCERPT

THE DRUG TRADE AMADEUS: THE BIGGER PICTURE

Normally, in dealing with classified activities, a title is given to a series of targets or objectives, for example: Amadeus.

Amadeus took shape after World War II, and it involved Operation Sunrise, (a.k.a., "Operation Sunshine"). Sunrise dealt with the surrender of Nazi-SS Gestapo in Italy to the U.S. Office of Strategic Services, (OSS). OSS is the predecessor of the current day CIA.

The surrender of the Italian SS-Gestapo almost intact, to the OSS had a price. The SS had agreed to go to work for the OSS, and among other duties, some of the SS were used to penetrate the iron curtain, and work against the Russians following World War II, (W.W.II). Some SS actually were recruited and served in the ranks of the first Green Beret unit to exist unofficially in the U.S. Army, that unit is 10th Special Forces Group, Airborne, and was originally housed at Flint Kerse, Bad Tolz, Germany, in an old group of SS Barracks. The 10th Special Forces Group, Airborne, (SFG(A)), had a war plan that dealt specifically with war in Eastern Europe, against the Russians. In time, the 10th SFG(A), would be reassigned, and the parent Group Headquarters would be at Fort Devens, MA., where two battalions of the 10th SFG(A), were assigned, and a third battalion of the 10th SFG(A), remained on permanent assignment at Bad Tolz. Some of the Italian SS were permanently reassigned by the OSS, to Latin American countries in the mid, to late-1940's, where they served as support for the war against communism that was beginning to form in the post W.W.II world.

The Italian SS in Latin America did initially improve upon, and create new smuggling routes all over Latin America for two specified reasons: (a). to move personnel and material wherever it was needed in Latin America to fight communism; (b). these routes were used to smuggle illegal goods, which in turn, created revenue that was used by both the OSS and the SS, towards their own political goals. In time, by 1948, when the CIA was born, and the State of Israel was formed, (which brought about the creation of the Israeli Mossad), the smuggling routes carried more drugs (opium, heroin mainly, as cocaine wasn't that widely used), than anti-Communist personnel and materials.

The same U.S. Government, (USG), officials that helped to make Sunrise a reality, also came into key USG positions in the late 1940's, early 1950's, among these were the likes of Allen Dulles, John Singlaub, Dwight Eisenhower. Dulles would become CIA Director, Singlaub, (a former OSS Officer is known for being the first U.S. Army Officer to pay his indigenous personnel at Kunming, China, with five pound bags of opium) would rise in rank and position to become one of the leading opponents to communism. Eisenhower was Supreme Allied Commander of all Military Forces in Europe during W.W.II, and had to approve Operation Sunrise.

Due to Sunrise taking place prior to the establishment of the State of Israel, and the creation of the Israeli Mossad, the Jewish community never knew, and was never told about Sunrise. n.l/

Due to the McCarthy Hearings in the 1950's, Senator Joe McCarthy accidentally stumbled onto Amadeus by conversation with Allen Dulles. McCarthy in turn put one of his best people onto this Amadeus matter, and told that person, (Richard Nixon, then a U.S. Attorney assigned to the U.S. Justice Department), to find out the deal with Amadeus. Nixon in turn stumbled onto yet a separate facet of Operation Sunrise, that dealt with former SS Officers from the Italian SS-Gestapo, who were involved with the CIA, and the U.S. Military in Europe who were testing U.S. Soldiers with L.S.D., and other hallucinogenic. This testing originated with the German SS-Gestapo as a means to defeat an enemy through the introduction of hallucinogenic into the water or food supply of the enemy, rendering them incapable of fighting. While Nixon was looking into the drug experiments on U.S. Soldiers, he ran into Warren Burger, a U.S. Attorney with the U.S. Justice Dept., who briefed Nixon extensively on the L.S.D. experiments. n.2/that Nixon became friends with Ronald Reagan. This association would flourish into a political history of its own. This same association would also bring about two specific sets of circumstances that would in and of themselves, provide additional events in history: (a). Nixon would help draft the invasion plans for the Bay of Pigs Invasion, which would be a military catastrophe, (and set the stage later in the 1960's through the 1990's, for providing Cuban freedom fighters to fight the CIA's war in Latin America, which would be funded by drug smuggling. The Bay of Pigs Invasion was done while Nixon was in cabinet of the Eisenhower White House in the late 1950's); (b). both Nixon and Reagan would sanction the testing of L.S.D. on unsuspecting civilians in San Francisco, by aerial delivery. This L.S.D. testing was part of the earlier L.S.D. testing involving Warren Burger.

It was during the McCarthy Hearings

Both Nixon and Reagan would go on to become the President of the United States, and both would carry with them one nagging problem, drug trafficking being tied into their own specific office: (a). the World Anti-Communist League, headed in part by General John Singlaub used offices previously belonging to the Republican Party, and from those offices engaged in acts that helped American based Italian Crime Families traffic Opium and Heroin out of Southeast Asia, into the U.S.

This was done in part through connections that Singlaub had with his former OSS China Team Members who included Howard Hunt, Paul Helliwell, and Lucian Cronin; (b). Reagan had worse problems, as the Contra Freedom Fighters were tied directly to the Reagan White House, and the Iran/Contra Independent Counsel Lawrence Walsh, found over 500 separate acts of Contra drug smuggling.

In closing, Amadeus produced a variety of off spring, and various operations. To fully understand how this could happen understand the key to this equation. The U.S. Justice Department following W.W.II, allowed countless ex-Nazi's to become U.S. Citizens in exchange for the knowledge that these Nazi's possessed. The U.S. Justice Department also allowed countless Nazi's to immigrate to countries outside of Germany again, for their knowledge. These Nazi's were in turn used by the Intelligence Agencies in the U.S. In considering this fact, note: (a). the so called Office of Special Investigation, (OSI), of the U.S. Justice Department that is responsible for tracking down ex-Nazi's and bringing them to trial or deportation hearing, is the same Dept., that let the Nazi's go free in the late 1940's; (b). the U.S. Justice Dept., is and was during the Reagan White House, the Dept. that under Edwin Meese, and William Barr, became embroiled in the Iran/Contra investigation to the point of cover up to keep Reagan out of the Iran/Contra scandal; (c). no matter what the scandal is, check the paperwork and the people involved, and you will find that-All roads lead back to the Dept. of Justice. n.3/n.1/ By the mid, to late 1950's, the Israeli Mossad operated in Latin America in increasing numbers, and to date, the Mossad has between 40-70 Mossad agents in Latin America at any given time, all of which are directly involved in the current drug trafficking problems, and none of the Mossad are aware that the old Nazi-SS Gestapo who had tried to erase the Jewish religion from the face of the earth, created the drug trafficking routes, and many methods still used today. The most infamous Mossad Officer is Michael Harrari, who supervised a string of 70 Mossad agents in Latin America as late as December 1989, and was named in Iran-Contra. n.2/ The connection of Nixon and Burger made it possible for Burger to become Chief Justice of the U.S. Supreme Court, and Nixon to use the U.S. Supreme Court to his own advantage during the Watergate Scandal. Burger also served an equally important role in the Warren Commission investigation into the assassination of J.F.K.

n.3/ Amadeus was the title umbrella given to Latin America for the actions that took place, and are taking place now, which were the direct result of Operation Sunrise relocation of the Italian SS-Gestapo. Among some of the more notable Operations that took place under Amadeus was "Project Sandmen," which dealt entirely with assassination of Latin Americans involved in communism, although it was estimated that 2% of all those assassinated were killed because they were rival drug traffickers. These are the assassinations that also occurred within Guatemala, and El Salvador. Beneath Project Sandmen were additional operations, including "Watchtower", which dealt entirely with military drug trafficking. The sequence is as follows: (a). Umbrella title such as Amadeus; (b). Project title such as Sandmen; (c). Operation title such as Watchtower; (d). under each Operation there may be multiple "Missions." But the missions will be a subsidiary of the Operation, which is a subsidiary of the Project, which in turn is a subsidiary of the Umbrella Title. Another example of this is "The Omni Project," enacted in Latin America during the Iran/Contra era, enacted several Operations, among which, the best known were, Operation Yellow Fruit, and Operation Sea Spray. It was Yellow Fruit which was investigated and resulted in the Court Martial of U.S. Military personnel for misappropriation of government property in Latin American.

There were a variety of missions run under both Operations.

Reagan became friends with Nixon during the McCarthy Hearings, as Reagan was a government informant.

Amadeus was the title of the umbrella that the Italian SS-Gestapo choose to work under, in the many facets described herein, and in other facets not described herein. The name was chosen due to the brilliant musical compositions arranged by Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart, between 1756-1791. The ranking Nazi SS-Gestapo officer was a big fan of Mozart, so when the Italian SS-Gestapo surrendered, Amadeus was the umbrella title given to what was literally the relocation, naturalization, and deployment of these SS-troops within the world and in the U.S., working for the USG.

The OSS was the agency literally responsible for the ties between the American-Italian Crime Families and the USG, and it came in three ways: (A). The USG through the OSS, and then through the FBI, and local police departments did approach the Italian Crime Families at the outset of W.W.II, and request that they monitor the water front docks, etc., as it was known that the Long Shoreman were tied into the Italian Organized Crime Families, and this monitoring was needed to reveal, and stop NAZI Germany, and any attacks or operations on the water front; (B). The OSS did secure for certain Italians in Italy, a reprieve from the SS in Italy, and did at the same time begin to establish what would later be the ties to the Italian-SS that did bring about Operation Sunrise; (C). When the OSS became the CIA, the CIA still relied upon the Italian Crime Families as Intelligence Sources around the world, due to the illegal business enterprise of the Italian Crime Families, this union between the "Mob" and the (CIA)-Spooks became known as a marriage of survival. The Mob needed the clout the CIA could provide in the U.S., and the CIA needed the various smuggling routes the Mob had worldwide to gather much needed intelligence in post W.W.II, and to put CIA operatives in the various countries worldwide, that were at that time, beginning the push for communist world domination. In time, the Mob became a much needed friend of the CIA in the U.S., often performing various, and denied unsanctioned Wet Operations.

The CIA, and the Mob couldn't stand media exposure, and that common bond did more to cover up the dealings between the two, than anything else.

6B. SF Troops were used in Latin America after being trained by SS Troops from Italy.

6C. The only constraint to using SF Troops, is funding. When the CIA began to use Black Ops Fund established in part by profits of CIA drug trafficking, SF Troops could be used without the need of prior approval from anyone, as the CIA was funding the Black Ops world-wide. This made the U.S. Congress obsolete, as the CIA didn't need funding from Congress, and since Congress wasn't aware of exactly what funds the CIA had available, SF Troops could be sent anywhere without Congress being advised.

7A. Iran-Contra Cocaine Trafficking (500 reported incidents were found by Lawrence Walsh, Special Prosecutor. Many of these same incidents were shadows of SF Operations in Latin America such as: "Pegasus" - Missions 1 through 28, "Omni Project", "Yellow Fruit", "Sea Spray", "Tipped Kettle-I", "Tipped Kettle-II", and "Red Mist". During the SF Operations, these reported Cocaine trafficking incidents took place, hand in glove!) 7B. CIA Cocaine trafficking into Mena, Arkansas. This connection to the CIA Asia Heroin connection ties the worldwide efforts of the CIA drug trafficking efforts together, refer to "Item 4D above."

7C. Mena, Arkansas, (under Governor Bill Clinton), was the mecca of CIA drug trafficking, in which Cocaine from Latin America, and Heroin from Asia, were traded by Gangs from California, compare "Items 7B and 4D above."

*The CIA has a history of using third party cut outs such as the Mafia, and the Gangs of the U.S. In testimony before the U.S. Senate Foreign Relations Subcommittee, Oregon Arms Dealer Richard Brenneke did testify that under George Bush (CIA Director) and Donald Gregg, Israel and Saudi Arabia was tapped to provide third party cut out services to Saigon after the U.S. cut off military aid in 1976.

* First reported involvement of a U.S. Intelligence Agency in the drug trafficking and trade, was made by the Wall Street Journal, dated April 18, 1980, in which the newspaper accurately reported that an OSS Team in Kunming, China, often paid their personnel in five pound bags of Opium. The members of that team were: John Singlaub (Director of the World Anti-Communist League); Ray Cline (CIA Iran-Contra Affair), Paul Helliwell (CIA); Lucien Conien (CIA); and Mitchell WerBell.

* European example of CIA drug trafficking was "COREA" in which the CIA claimed they were trafficking drugs/arms to gain confidence of terrorist faction. When a Special Forces Officer, Major Tiny McKee attempted to expose this Operation COREA, he was killed on Lockerbie PAN AM Flight 103. This COREA Operation received its funding from BCCI/First American Bank (CIA Bank) Account Number 2843900, see: "Why Did They Die?" Time Magazine, April 27, 1992, Author Roy Bowen. The CIA allowed Heroin to traffic into the U.S., in exchange for intelligence on U.S. Citizens held by Middle Eastern Terrorists. The CIA helped traffic the drugs.

BLACK OP FUND #2843900.

* Following the Invasion of Panama while George Bush was President: (1). Noriega was arrested, and while the Noriega trial was ongoing, even Noriega requested information from the CIA on Operation Watchtower which the CIA never fully responded to. (WHY would Noriega seek this information if Watchtower didn't occur ?); (2). Noriega dropped the embarrassing subpoenas that requested the CIA information on Watchtower, in exchange, the U.S. Government, (USG), unfroze 3 million dollars in frozen assets belonging to Noriega; (3). During the ongoing investigation into the Operation Watchtower drug trafficking, there was information received, that 70% of all CIA drug money was in fact laundered through the banks of Panama. This allegation takes on merit when you consider that: (a). Panama was invaded after Noriega shut it down financially; (b). Once invasion was over, the Banks of Panama reopened, and according to the U.S. State Dept, and the U.S. G.A.O., drug trafficking increased after the invasion. If the Banks of Panama were responsible for laundering 70% of the CIA drug profits, it would stand to reason that Panama would again flourish as a drug trafficking route after the invasion reopened that country. After all, logically speaking, a Country can traffic drugs all day, but if that Country has no way to launder the profits of the drug trafficking, the effort to traffic the drugs is in vain, as there is no profit that would be earned or recognized from the drug trafficking. So after the invasion, Panama could again traffic drug with no problems, as that Country and other Countries had the Banks of Panama to launder the drug profits.

*A Costa Rican Special Legislative Assembly Drug Commission identified a link between the Colonel Oliver North/Iran Contra Network, Noriega, and International Drug Traffickers, and recommended that North, Secor, U.S. Ambassador Lewis Tambs, and Poindexter be barred from ever re-entering Costa Rica due to this drug activity, see: "Hull Shucks Jail: Did DEA Help John Hull Flee Costa Rica?", Village Voice, October 22, 1991; L.A. Times, January 8, 1987, RE: John Hull.

Supreme Court Decision on Brady Bill Ignored by Clinton Administration

U.S. OFFICIALS TO WORK WITH POLICE ON GUN CHECKS

Reuters 16:16 07-16-97

[ED. NOTE. This one takes the cake. No matter what the Supreme Court rules - the U.S. Officials (Rubin and Reno??) will circumvent it. What part of "thou shalt not infringe" do they not understand!!!!...Dot Bibee]

WASHINGTON (Reuters) - Treasury Secretary Robert Rubin and Attorney General Janet Reno said Wednesday they will work with local police to make sure background checks continue on would-be handgun buyers.

The two Cabinet members met a delegation of police groups to explore options after a divided Supreme Court last month struck down a key part of the Brady gun control law requiring local sheriffs to conduct the checks during a five-day period.

Rubin said it was "critical to the public safety" that the background checks continue on applicants who want to buy a gun. He said the high court's decision meant law enforcement officers still had to deal with the issue but would have to change their approach.

Rubin said federal officials wanted suggestions from the law enforcement officers and wanted to work closely with them to find a plan for dealing with the issue.

Despite the ruling, local police officers may continue to perform the checks voluntarily. In addition, a national system to instantly check the buyer's background must be in place by November 1998.

Reno said she agreed with Rubin on the past effectiveness of the Brady law. "It seems to me this was a good law-enforcement tool."

She said it would be important to develop "comprehensive, accurate, complete criminal-history records," especially when the national system takes effect.

Reno said she wanted the police officials to try to get the states to understand the importance of developing comprehensive criminal-history records. Not all of the states are expected to have complete records by November 1998.

The Forms shown below were faxed to us by an anonymous source. A call to the National Rifle Association was placed. We were told by their headquarters that gun registration is against the law. . . . and the Brady Bill was overturned by the Supreme Court. No matter the law, no matter the Constitution, the Clinton Administration is sticking to its guns. . . . while planning on sticking you up for yours! Ask your Congressman if he plans to go along with this registration plan?

NEW MEGA-MERGED BANKING BEHEMOTHS = BIG RISK

Source:
MULTINATIONAL MONITOR
Date: June 1996
Title: "The Making of the Banking Behemoths" Author: Jake Lewis

1995 was a record year of bank mergers. Chase Manhattan and Chemical bank combined to create the nation's largest bank, with $300 billion in assets—while on the west coast, the merger of First Interstate and Wells Fargo created a new giant with over $100 billion in assets. The massive consolidation of the nation's banking resources has resulted in 71.5% of U.S. banking assets being controlled by the 100 largest banking organizations, representing less than 1 percent of the total banks in the nation.

Under the Bank Merger and Bank Holdings Company Act, the Federal Reserve is required, before approving any application of a merger, to test how well the convenience and needs of the public are being met by the merger. Critics charge that the Federal Reserve Board is doing a disservice to the American public by not applying this "public convenience and needs" test to the wave of banking mergers—as required by the Bank Merger and Bank Holding Company Acts. In light of this, analysts are concerned that the growing giants of the banking industry will "shift insurance risks to taxpayers, cost jobs, lead to increased rates for bank customer service, make it harder to get loans and lessen community access to bank branches."

The trend toward bigger banks is creating a system whereby giant banking institutions are taking on "too big to fail" status. Indeed, a failure of any one of these new giants would have a devastating effect on the nation's financial health. And with the Federal Reserve capping the amount that financial institutions have to pay into the governments' bank insurance fund at $25 billion, just 1.25 percent of deposits are now insured. Consequently, any bailout of one of these new megabanks would come directly from the pockets of taxpayers.

Studies have also found that banks in concentrated markets tend to charge higher rates for certain types loans, and tend to offer lower interest rates on certain types of deposits than do banks in less concentrated markets. A 1995 study by the U.S. Public Interest Research Group and the Center for Study of Responsive Law showed that fees on checking and savings accounts increased at twice the rate of inflation from 1993 to 1995 as bank mergers moved forward.

Finally, the trend toward megabanks is closing out community access and making it harder to get loans. In 1995, the Justice Department ordered Wells Fargo to divest itself of 61 branches it acquired through its merger with First Interstate to preserve competition for certain types of lending. But the 61 branches that Wells Fargo divested itself of, are being sold to Home Savings and Loan of Los Angeles, which recently decided not to continue its affordable housing lending. In a community where affordable housing is vital to its stability, the decision of Home Savings and Loan is very disturbing.

DEFORMING CONSENT: THE PR INDUSTRY'S SECRET WAR ON ACTIVISTS

Sources:
COVERT ACTION QUARTERLY

Authors: John Stauber and Sheldon Rampton
EARTH ISLAND JOURNAL
Date: Winter 1995-1996
Title: "Public Relations, Private Interests"
Authors: John Stauber and Sheldon Rampton

This article exposes the multi-million dollar clients of major public relations firms that are behind the creation of false non-profit organizations, which target activists and proposed legislation that threaten big business. Most of these organizations focus on environmental, consumer and labor issues. The strategies of these powerful media manipulators include the defamation of activists, their ideas, and the deception of American citizens.

Through the PR industry and the enormous financial resources of their corporate clients, these organizations mobilize private detectives, lawyers and undercover spies; influence editorial and news decisions, launch phony "grassroots" campaigns and use high-tech information systems to influence and manipulate public opinion and policy. With its array of sophisticated persuasive weaponry, the PR industry can out-maneuver, overpower and outlast citizen reformers.

In one recent—and high-profile—example, the Health Insurance Association of America (HIAA) not only supported but created the Coalition for Health Insurance Choices (CHIC) to defeat the Clinton administration's attempt at health care reform. They utilized public opinion polling and lobbying strength to pinpoint its campaign against mandatory health alliances.

"Greenwashing" is the term now commonly used to describe the ways that polluters employ deceptive PR to cultivate an environmentally responsible public image while covering up their abuse of the biosphere and public health. "Astroturf lobbying," a term coined by Lloyd Bentsen, is another new concept which Bentsen describes as the "synthetic grassroots movements that now can be manufactured for a fee." Campaigns & Elections magazine defines "Astroturf" as a "grassroots program that involves the instant manufacturing of public support for a point of view in which either uninformed activists are recruited or means of deception are used to recruit them".

These anti-public-interest campaigns generate the false impression of public support in the name of "citizen activism" to promote the ideas and pursue the goals of corporate clients. Consequently, dissenting voices have been muffled, scientifically proven unhealthy chemicals and practices have been legalized, and public opinion has been profoundly, yet quietly influenced. FEMA PLOT

OLIVER NORTH: NO HERO

by Devvy Kidd

I heard someone extolling the virtuous Oliver North and what a good Christian soldier he is. I hope all those who have thrown millions of dollars at this guy and listen to his radio show everyday, do some homework and quit being dazzled by his military uniform and gap-toothed smile. North is a liar and a dope dealer and he can sue me if he wants. Rush Windbag, Ollie, and the Watergate bungler, G. Gordon Liddy are phonies who keep people distracted and away from facts. They remind me of gossip columnists, a little bit of substance here and there, the rest is pap.

Last year the Denver public library got the 28-volumn Iran-Contra Hearings. There is some amazing stuff in those tomes, not just about Ollie and if anyone has access to them at your library, I recommend doing what I've been doing for the last 8 months: Read an hour or so at a time, xerox the pages you want for reference material.

The News-Sentinel, JULY 4-5, 1987 by Alfonso Chardy, Washington Bureau

Washington, DC - Lt. Col. Oliver North helped draft a plan in 1964 to impose martial law in the United States in event of an emergency, inspiring a sharp protest by then attorney General William French Smith, according to government officials.

THE SECRET PLAN CALLED FOR SUSPENSION OF THE CONSTITUTION, turning control of the government over to the little known Federal Emergency management Agency [FEMA], appointment of military commanders to run state and local governments and declaration of martial law in the event of such a crisis as nuclear war, VIOLENT AND WIDESPREAD INTERNAL DISSENT OR NATIONAL OPPOSITION TO A U.S. MILITARY INVASION ABROAD.

Investigators now believe that from 1983 to 1986, North's office, in the Old Executive Office Building adjacent to the White House, was the heart of an informal secret structure involved in far more than the sale of arms to Iran and the funding of the undercover war in Nicaragua.

North's influence within the secret structure was so great, the sources said, that he was able to have the orbits of sophisticated surveillance satellites altered to follow Soviet ships around the world, call for the launching of high-flying spy aircraft on secret missions over Cuba and Nicaragua and become involved in sensitive domestic activities.

[Editorial Note: My husband is a retired full Colonel, U.S. Army. John did a four-year stint at the Pentagon and worked under many generals, mostly 3-4 stars. I can damn straight guarantee you that no one gave a mere Army Colonel THAT KIND OF POWER. If you've been in the military structure, you know what I'm talking about - North's power was incredible to say the least.]

Some of Reagan's closest friends and advisers, including former NSA William Clark, the late CIA Director William Casey and AG Edwin Meese, were part of that informal secret structure, according to several congressional investigators and government officials who released the information

North's involvement in a proposal to RADICALLY ALTER AMERICAN GOVERNMENT BY EXECUTIVE ORDER in a time of crisis is evidence that he was involved in a wide range of secret activities, foreign and domestic, far beyond the Iran-Contra affair, according to the officials.

Arthur Liman, the chief counsel for the Senate Iran-Contra committee, has declared in an unreleased memo that North was at the center of what amounted to a "secret government within a government." North, a staff member of President Reagan's NSC until his dismissal 1st November, begins long-awaited testimony Tuesday before the Senate and House Iran-Contra Committees.

Liman wrote prior to the current hearings that he expected to show that "a policy of decision was made at the highest levels" to transfer U.S. support of the Nicaraguan Contra rebels to the NSC, where North operated. Thus, Liman wrote, "we favor examining how that decision was implemented."

"This is part of the story that reveals the WHOLE SECRET GOVERNMENT WITHIN A GOVERNMENT OPERATED from the Executive Office building by a lieutenant colonel, WITH ITS OWN ARMY, AIR FORCE, DIPLOMATIC AGENTS, INTELLIGENCE OPERATIVES AND APPROPRIATIONS CAPACITY," Limon wrote.

NORTH HELPED DRAFT THE PLAN TO IMPOSE MARTIAL LAW WHILE SERVING as the NSC's liaison to FEMA, an executive agency [Ed note: Now a full cabinet] with responsibility for the government's management of national crises.

ALARMED AT THE PLAN, Attorney General Smith dispatched a letter to William McFarlane, North's NSC boss at the time. The August 2, 1984 letter expressed FEAR THAT FEMA WAS ESTABLISHING ITSELF AS AN "EMERGENCY CZAR."

"I believe the role assigned to FEMA in the revised Executive Order EXCEEDS ITS PROPER FUNCTION AS A COORDINATING AGENCY FOR emergency preparedness," Smith wrote. "This department and others have repeatedly raised serious policy and legal objections to the creation of an 'emergency czar' role for FEMA." [Ed note: So, they got rid of the objections by making it a federal cabinet.]

The contingency plan was being written as part of an executive order or legislative package that Reagan would sign and hold within the NSC until such time as a severe crisis arose. It is not known whether Reagan signed the plan.

Officials consulted for this article, members of the CIA, State Department and Pentagon, said they do not have a full record yet of the SECRET GOVERNMENT. The White House has rejected Liman's notion OF A SECRET GOVERNMENT. End of document

There is a mountain of other documentation on this whole stinking barrel of fish, a lot of research done by Daniel Sheehan and of course, the Iran-Contra tomes themselves. Of course, anyone who could even think the government East of the Potomac is anything less than honest and is here for our own good, why, they must be conspiracy nuts!

As for Ollie North, who does he think he is anyway? During his senate race he parroted how much he loved the constitution and his country while before getting his finger caught in the cookie jar - he was working on plans that would suspend the U.S. Constitution and of course, our Bill of Rights. Some hero.

Remember how he got caught - and this was all on television and is in the transcripts contained in the hearing books at the Denver library - he altered correspondence and forgot that they changed the stationary heading. Very honorable. The original damning letters and documents had one stationary on top, the ones he doctored to protect the lies, had another. A sharp congressional staffer checked the dates they changed the stationary and bingo! Ollie got caught. Otherwise, he would have just kept lying and covering up. How honorable. Is it any wonder the Marines got rid of him quicker than the blink of an eye?

SIEGE OF THE SWEENEYS

YOU CAN HELP STOP ANOTHER WACO-IN-PROGRESS.

While I frequently see information concerning various government atrocities, I have rarely had occasion to observe a situation where the targets of the governments' wrath were in such a totally blameless posture as this one, nor a much worse saga of underhanded, backdoor, dirty-dealing, with clear examples of attorney, judicial and government agency corruption and collusion.

If you wanted "the" case, this is it. The Sweeneys are not "religious whackos," or "government operatives," with a certainty. They haven't been involved in any "get-rich-quick" scams, they aren't putting liens on judges, they aren't lunatics, they aren't bearded hillbillies, or white supremacists (which is mentioned solely to note that the media will have a hard time in this case in its role of helping the government look good by portraying the victim in a sensationalized and repulsive manner, as if that suddenly absolves the government of wrongdoing).

No, they are a well-respected, uppercrust Massachusetts family who have owned their property for six generations, who have broken no laws, who have done nothing wrong, who have LITIGATED their situation for TEN YEARS, trying to "play by the book," only to get shafted by dirty little deeds by dirtier little men at every turn.

They are now under DAILY threat of entry of their home by armed federal agents to evict them, under orders from Andrew Hove, acting Chairman of the FDIC, and FDIC's attorney, Joseph Shea, of Nutter, McClennen and Fish in Boston. I have personally been given this threat several times by Joe Shea. I trust that advises all of the seriousness of the above situation.

NO PHYSICAL RESPONSE WITH ARMS IS PRESENTLY REQUESTED AND YOU ARE SPECIFICALLY ASKED NOT TO GO TO THE PROPERTY WITH ARMS.

However, guards and watchers — UNARMED — are requested and needed, as well as food, money, video cameras, cellphones, radios. What if a few hundred people simply occupied the property and refused to leave? I hear they have good pizza in that area. Bring your sleeping bags and tents.

The Sweeney Story

For more than 40 days, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. (FDIC) has threatened to send armed federal marshals to oust John and Rhett Sweeney from their home at any time.

In response, John Sweeney, a former Army Special Forces Officer, and his wife, Rhett, along with numerous others, are peacefully occupying their 14-acre estate, called Rock Maple, in Hamilton, Massachusetts, a well-to-do suburb of Boston. Hamilton is located in the heart of Massachusetts hunt country, where Princess Anne used to attend three-day horse riding events. A call has been put out for others to join them.

The Sweeneys do not intend to leave. I support them in this decision 100%. They also have the support of local and national media, their town council, Congressmen, State legislators and other top politicians.

William Cohen, the Secretary of Defense, and Senator Alfonse D'Amato have said the Sweeneys were "fraudulently deceived and victimized by the government".

So why the threat of an armed siege?

John and Rhett Sweeney were the victims of a failed bank, ComFed. They had borrowed $1.6 million from ComFed, to create a subdivision in their area, mortgaging their homes for the money. They were to complete part of the development, then ComFed was to loan additional funds to complete the subdivision. After the Sweeneys had completed their end of the deal, thereby making the property far more valuable than the $1.6 million mortgage, ComFed reneged on its end of the deal and sued to foreclose the loan.

The Sweeney's counter-sued for deceptive trade practices and intentional infliction of emotional distress. They obtained a judgment of $4 million plus interest (which now totals more than $6 million with interest), against ComFed (the Sweeneys remained obliged to repay the mortgage to ComFed of $1.6 million). A Massachusetts jury ruled on parts of the case in late 1990 and a Massachusetts State Court Judge ruled on the remainder in January 1991.

At that time, John Hanify was the lawyer for ComFed, the failed bank. John Hanify is the name partner in the lawfirm Hanify and King in Boston. He is the son of Attorney Edward Hanify, with the lawfirm Ropes and Gray, the same firm that represented Senator Edward Kennedy in charges against him for the drowning of Mary Jo Kopeckne at Chappaquiddick.

John Hanify literally took the entire physical court file from the Massachusetts State Court, and hid it in his office for nearly a month. Hanify has admitted doing this and as his justification, has claimed that what was in the file was "damaging" to his client and that he was talking to the Attorney General about what to do about it.

There is no legal basis for an attorney to take a court file and hide it in his office. Anywhere else, this would be obstruction of justice, conversion, tampering with official records, or just outright theft.

This same attorney, Hanify, who had worked for ComFed bank while it was failing due to the corruption of the banking officials in charge, later became the attorney for the government's "Resolution Trust Corporation" ("RTC") charged with supervising the assets of failed banks.

In the meantime, Hanify filed a petition for removal to the Federal District Court. (He did NOT appeal the judgment against ComFed to a Court of Appeals in Massachusetts, instead, he simply changed courts, from a state court to a federal court. These are separate, but EQUAL courts. A federal district court is not "higher" than a State Court, but a state court has jurisdiction over State and many federal issues, and a federal court has jurisdiction over certain federal law issues.)

Federal law allows a case to be removed from a state court to a federal court if a federal agency is involved, however, this must occur within 30 days of learning of the reason the case could be removed. By the time Hanify removed the case, it had been pending for two years and had already been to trial and judgment. Records reflect that he filed this removal on January 11, 1991, although there are indications these records were altered to make it appear that the case had been removed before the State Court judge had issued her ruling on January 30.

Supposedly, the basis for the removal was that RTC had become the receiver for ComFed, thereby creating a federal question and federal court jurisdiction and the reason to remove the case. However, RTC did not become the receiver for

The Sweeney Siege

ComFed until February 1, 1991, so if the case was in fact removed on January 11, there was no basis for the removal at all. Additionally, the Sweeneys' action had also been against ComFed Mortgage Co., a State Mortgage Co., which was specifically exempted from the removal law.

When Hanify removed the Court file, the file contained the only then-existing copy of the State Court Judge's recent order of judgment in favor of the Sweeneys and against ComFed, and the Sweeneys had never seen the judge's order. Neither the Sweeneys nor their attorneys ever received notice that the case had been removed to federal court.

When John Hanify hid the Court file for nearly a month, while at the same time removing the case to Federal Court without notice, this had the effect of preventing the Sweeneys from learning of the removal, until the time had run out for the Sweeneys to protest the removal action. It also prevented them from learning of the $4 million State Court judgment in their favor.

The RTC subsequently obtained summary judgment on a motion to the Federal Court to declare the State Courts judgment too late, based on the removal date of January 11, which supposedly preceded the State Court's ruling of January 30. The Federal Judge declared that because the case had been removed to federal court on January 11, the State Court no longer had any authority to issue its judgment on January 30.

However, as noted previously, there was no basis for removal on January 11 because RTC did not become receiver of ComFed until Feb. 1, 1991, and at least one of the State Chartered ComFed defendants was not even subject to removal to federal court.

The Sweeneys had a valid, enforceable and substantial State Court judgment against ComFed which ComFed DID NOT APPEAL, but which ComFed, and then RTC, by the same attorney, instead, literally stole and hid from them.

Not enough to have you saying, "Outrageous!" yet?

Try this: Remember that John Hanify, the lawyer for ComFed and then RTC, is the son of the lawyer whose lawfirm represented Senator Edward Kennedy in the Chappaquidick drowning case. When John Hanify "removed" the case to federal court, he first took it to Federal Judge Woodlock.

Judge Woodlock and John Hanify had worked together in the U.S. Attorney's office. Judge Woodlock and John Hanify's father, Edward, of Ropes and Grey, (the lawfirm who represented Kennedy in the Chappaquidick case) both testified at Congressional hearings in favor of the nomination for federal judge of one Edward F. Harrington.

Edward F. Harrington had been nominated for the federal judge position by Senator Edward Kennedy. Harrington had worked with both Woodlock and Hanify in the U.S. Attorney's office. (Prominent members of the state bar had opposed Harrington's nomination. See this at <http://www.qui-tam.com> and click on "Edward F. Harrington.")

When Judge Woodlock received the Sweeneys' case from John Hanify, he took himself off the case, citing a possible "conflict of interest." Then, instead of allowing the case to be randomly assigned to another judge, as court rules require, he transferred the case to none other than federal judge Edward F. Harrington, who refused to remove himself.

Still not enough?

When the Sweeneys tried to hold Hanify accountable in Judge Harrington's Court for stealing the court file, after Harrington refused to remove himself, Hanify's father's lawfirm, Ropes and Gray appeared on behalf of Hanify, with taxpayers footing the bill (FOIA requests show that Ropes and Gray were paid $22,131.15 between 1991-1995; Hanify and King were paid $155,402.07).

Want one better than that?

We have just confirmed that one William T. Harrington, a 1993 lawschool graduate, is Judge Edward Harrington's son. Just coincidentally, after Judge Edward Harrington had proclaimed the Sweeneys' State Court judgment for $4 million was no good, and allowed John Hanify, on behalf of ComFed and the RTC to walk all over the Sweeneys, Judge Harrington's son got a job as an associate with John Hanify's lawfirm, Hanify and King (the lawfirm representing ComFed and the RTC against the Sweeneys in front of Judge Harrington.)

Continuing the saga, however, next, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation ("FDIC") took over the Sweeney case when the RTC closed in December 1995. The FDIC did not investigate the clear and obvious obstruction of justice and fraud in this case. Instead, criminal charges were dropped against ComFed bankers and the FDIC/RTC entered into a settlement agreement with them that let them off scott-free for underhanded mortgage lending practices and causing the failure of ComFed (as admitted in SEC filings by ComFed in 1994 and 1995, which you can get directly from the SEC at: <http://www.sec.gov/cgi-bin/srch-edgar?COMFED>).

The RTC then obtained a default judgment of foreclosure of the Sweeney's property. An attorney for the RTC, Joe Shea, of Nutter, McClennen and Fish, feigned a negotiation posture with the Sweeneys. Believing negotiations were under way, the Sweeneys left their home for a Thanksgiving visit with family, only to learn on their return that the RTC had sold their home at an auction, conducted on their property while they were gone, where the RTC sold the Sweeney's property from the RTC to the RTC, for $789,000, far less than its $ 1.6 million value.

FDIC then took over from the RTC. The same attorney who had conducted the underhanded "auction", Joe Shea, of Nutter, McClennen, and Fish, became FDIC's attorney and obtained an order to evict the Sweeneys.

All of this was done, from the time ComFed went under, without any of the subsequent entities (RTC or FDIC) being substituted for ComFed into the legal action — in other words, they were never even part of the case, yet proceeded as if they were.

Nearly bankrupt, with over $300,000 in legal fees, the Sweeneys proceeded in Court on their own many times, which allowed Joe Shea to obtain judgments and conduct proceedings he could not otherwise have done. Harrington's federal court decision was upheld by the First Circuit Court, who decidedly ignored all the fraud and under-the-table dealings, and based their ruling on a decision called the D'Oenche Duhme doctrine (which says that to sue the FDIC, a contract must be in writing). The Sweeneys contract WAS in writing. To write the decision, the First Circuit simply ignored that fact and pronounced that the Sweeneys could not sue the FDIC based on this doctrine, and we, the peons of the public, were supposed to believe it. Even if we didn't believe it, since judges have declared themselves "immune" from lawsuits, they know there is nothing anyone can do about it. (And they wonder why folks are holding "common law" courts and attaching liens to judges and attorneys' properties? Wonder no more.)

It is upon this bogus judgment from Judge Harrington that Joe Shea obtained an order of eviction of the Sweeneys.

Throughout last week, Andrew Hove of FDIC claimed that the FDIC had made all sorts of settlement offers to the Sweeneys, while at the same time, in private efforts by myself to engage the FDIC in negotiation or mediation, the FDIC's posture was actually to threaten the Sweeneys with eviction by armed federal agents if they did not get out of their home.

The FDIC also apparently told the same false story to Congressmen, claiming that it had made all sorts of offers, while the Sweeneys "refused to negotiate" and "didn't have an attorney."

I entered the case the first of July. If you view the Sweeneys' webpage at: <http://www.que-tam.com>, you can see from the stack of letters from me to the FDIC's attorney last week alone, one of which literally begs them to engage in mediation, and FDIC's attorney's replies, that the FDIC has simply lied to the public and to Congressmen.

Andrew Hove, Acting Chairman of the FDIC, and FDIC's attorney, Joe Shea, also refused to put any of the FDIC's publicly proclaimed offers in writing to the Sweeneys, despite repeated requests from me that they do so.

[As a side note, somebody please notice that the so-called "investigation" into underhanded real estate deals by Hillary Clinton's lawfirm was referred to the very same ANDREW HOVE at FDIC by the Inspector General. Either this is a case of the foxes investigating the foxes or the Democratic party is asleep at the wheel, letting Republican Hove, with his stellar record in the Sweeney case for "above-board" dealings, conduct an investigation into the First Lady's affairs.]

It gets curiouser and curiouser.

Last week, whenever Shea would respond to my letters, instead of calling me on the phone or sending email, he would work on composing letters to me after 5:00 p.m. (Note, Shea frequently complains to anyone who will listen, about the Sweeneys "costing the taxpayers money." His firm has billed more than $1 million on this case. Nutter, McClennan and Fish had billed the taxpayers $884,527.63 by December 31, 1993) These nightly forays were doubtlessly billed at prime time rates.

Demanding Accountability

The editors, writers, supporters and contributors who make The Idaho Observer possible are all deeply concerned for the future of our country. America is in trouble because the people of this nation trusted their elected officials to protect their interests and then took a nap while those same officials abused that trust. Unless we as a free people wake up and take responsibility for preserving our Constitutional rights we will inevitably lose them.

Unlike the dominant media, which chooses to report the news through special interest filters to guarantee our progressive and collective slide into socialistic slavery, The Idaho Observer reports news with the understanding that a truly free press is the only thing which stands between Americans and tyranny.

Around 8:30 every night, instead of telephoning me or sending his letters by email, he would mail these letters by overnight mail to me from a huge investment company called Fidelity Investments, quite a distance from his office (I have the overnight mail envelopes and printouts confirming this).

Airborne Express confirmed that Shea's package was BILLED to Fidelity and that the 8:30 pickup time was after the normal pickup in the area, that this was a "special" pickup and they only picked it up at all because "Fidelity was such a big customer."

Fidelity just happens to own Centennial Technologies, a company whose CEO, Emanuel Pinez, was recently charged with fraud. Joe Shea's lawfirm, Nutter, McClennen and Fish of Boston, represents Pinez in the fraud charges.

Fidelity also just happens to own Community Newspapers, the only newspaper that has trashed the Sweeneys, in an article that just happened to come out this past Sunday. (Numerous other national and international broadcasts and newspaper articles have covered this story, all pointing out how the Sweeneys have been taken to the cleaners by the government and are now facing armed force.)

Perhaps there's a reason Fidelity has been so charitably letting Joe Shea ship his overnight mail, billed to Fidelity. Perhaps there's a reason RTC sold the Sweeneys' properties to itself for a measly $789,000 when it was worth $1.6 million. Perhaps there's a reason the government has spent FAR in excess of the value of this property in legal fees, to keep the property that RTC stole from the Sweeneys and sold to itself for pennies on the dollar.

FDIC acting chairman Andrew Hove's letters threatening the Sweeneys mention that he will entertain offers from "other purchasers." Could Fidelity be one of those "other purchasers?" A property that is worth more than $1.6 million that could be picked up for $789,000 or less would produce a nearly $1 million dollar asset on the company's books over night, wouldn't it?

Perhaps there's a reason that THIS particular mortgage, unlike the thousands and thousands of other "non-performing" mortgages taken over from banks by the FDIC, wasn't sold in a bulk sale, but instead, FDIC seems to have taken a really personal interest in making sure it gets put up for sale, while refusing to pay the judgment owed to the Sweeneys and threatening to oust them with armed federal agents.

Shea has repeatedly refused to answer whether or not he represents any undisclosed parties, including Fidelity, in this action.

On Monday, July 14, FDIC's attorney, Joe Shea, of Nutter, McClennen and Fish of Boston, filed a motion in the Court of Appeals for "mediation" but chose the mediator himself — a local U.S. District Court Judge — which he advised me Friday was "non-negotiable, take it or leave it." He also refused to agree to a consent order that would hold off the eviction of the Sweeneys by armed federal agents during mediation.

In other words, this latest stunt of proposing "mediation" in the appellate court is nothing but a publicity stunt by the FDIC so it can publicly claim it "tried to mediate," all the while telling the Sweeneys, "get out, or else we'll send in the armed federal agents." I received yet another demand today from Joe Shea, telling the Sweeneys to vacate the property.

Numerous Congressmen, including U.S. Congressman Tierney, Senator John Kerry, Massachusetts State Senator Tarr and State Representative Clark, as well as the Secretary of Defense, and the town board of Hamilton, have all demanded an investigation of this fraud.

Congressional hearings and testimony, at which Rhett Sweeney was called to testify, have put much of this on the Congressional record, yet NO ONE will bring these people up on criminal charges, no one will put a stop to the fraud, and no one will pay the Sweeneys the money they are owed, or call off the armed federal agents. WHY NOT?

get YOUR Congressmen INQUIRING, NOW!! Be sure to tell Joe Shea, his boss, Neil Motenko, and Andrew Hove at FDIC which Congressmen YOU called, too.

YOU CAN DO IT!! ONE OR TWO PHONE CALLS AND EMAILS, THAT'S ALL IT TAKES. Long-time AEN folks have seen this work, time and again.

Note: Each call to a congressman is counted as if it is the voice of 7 constituents (that's how they count them). Be 14 people, call twice !!

ENVIRONMENT

WHEN THE ROMANTIC CRY OF THE WILDERNESS TURNS TO RAW TERROR

From the DeWeese Report

CNN did a special report recently, on wolf attacks on children in India. Dozens of children have been carried off by the wolves, which are listed as "endangered",

We are supposed to believe that this is a story about a third world country and doesn't really affect us here in America.

In reality, it may not be long before more and more of that type of story is seen here, in America, as we rapidly become a third world country. TFA

"Have you ever heard the wolf cry to the new corn moon? " That line in the popular song from the hit children's movie "Pocahontas" implies the romance of the wilderness and the majesty of the wolf.

Over the past two decades our lives have been saturated with the romantic, majestic images of the wild earth. Movies, television and books present the wilderness as the highest ideal where noble animals live in harmony with one another.

Interior Secretary Bruce Babbitt and Vice President Al Gore invade our religion by telling us that the Endangered Species Act is actually the new "Noah's Ark" and that the book of Genesis is the guiding spirit for environmental policy. The primitive societies of Native American Indians are revered as the ideal combination of man and nature.

Business, once the great bastion of resistance to illogical economics and "feel-good" rhetoric, has come to embrace the whole concept of anti-technology, "back-to-our-roots" revisionism. In fact, it is the advertising budgets of big business that fuels the green propaganda machine.

Using smiling faces and catchy jingles, Americans are encouraged to buy organically grown food, purged of the very chemicals that made American food products the envy of the world and the most healthful to eat. The refrigeration industry is actually helping the government remove and replace old units that used the now-banned freon. Cost appears to be no object - nor does scientific truth.

Developers are now helping community regulators design rules for building homes. Under the drive for "sustainable development," these new rules deny property rights and actually rob the developers of as much as twenty to forty percent of their land by requiring the inclusion of "green ways" and bike paths in their developments. The developers are actually helping create a new bureaucracy that will silently enforce regulations restricting what property they can buy and develop.

The growth of communities is now being criticized as "urban sprawl" as new regulations are being designed to "downsize" and pull back the growth.

Throughout every agency of the federal government, programs now demand the implementation of "sustainable development" policies "where communities will blend in a seamless web with nature," where homes will be smaller, cars will disappear and all will live in harmony within the biosphere of vast wilderness that will surround the much diminished human habitat areas.

School children are subjected to a constant barrage of propaganda about the fragile balance of earth's "biosphere." School groups trudge into swamps and wooded areas to bond with nature. As class projects they write to elected officials pleading for more regulations to assault technology and progress.

In the rural areas of the nation vast regions of land are being shut off to people to "preserve the natural setting." Once feared predators are being injected into areas close to communities as trapping and hunting is banned in more and more states.

And the howl of the wolf has become a romantic metaphor symbolizing man's return to nature. It all sounds so romantic, so peaceful, so right.

UNARMED AND ALONE

But in a society that has lost touch with its producers, few think about where their safety from the wilderness originates. Was it not always so? Does not our food come from Safeway and our safety from the police department? Haven't our children always been protected from disease and predators? Science, who needs it?

Chemicals are dangerous. Make mine natural and clean. We don't need smelly old factories and I hate those awful traffic jams, so get rid of the cars. Let us live with nature, in harmony.

Shouldn't someone tell the animals that the rules have changed? Shouldn't we make sure that they are entered into "revisioning" classes to teach them that people are now their friends and neighbors, and not today's meal? It really is the only way the whole warm and fuzzy ideals will work.

Moms, "have you ever heard the wolf cry to the new corn moon," - not the tame, controlled cry, as played out in a romantic scene on television or in the movies. Have you ever truly heard the wolf cry, live, with nothing between you and the animal?

Picture yourself living in the "urban cluster" of the future. You live on the outer row of a low-rise crowded development (as outlined in the HUD report, DeWeese Report, vol.2,#6) A vast, unbroken wilderness meets your back door. You are at the mercy of the wilderness. You have no car with which to escape because they've been banned. You have only a bike on which to travel around the cluster.

You have no rights, as a human, to protect yourself, your child or your property - because government decree has made it illegal to kill a wild animal. In fact the animal has been given all of the rights that once protected people from the wilderness. You, the human are only a tolerated intruder on wolf habitat. Gun control laws have assured that you are totally disarmed.

Sitting in your home you hear it. The long, moaning sound of the cry of the wolf. It is a blood-curdling sound. The forest behind you becomes deadly silent. There is now a wolf within feet of your home. Your child is out playing with the neighbor's children. The wolf howls again. Do you sit and listen and think about how noble and romantic it sounds? Or do you run for the door to gather your child?

Anyone but an environmentalist who has heard the wolf cry will tell you, romance will be the furthest thought from your mind.

Our green friends haven't told you this part, have they? They haven't told you about the reality of the world they are creating for you. They've neglected to mention the terror of being an unarmed pioneer mom in a wilderness where the animals have all of the rights and you are viewed as an invader. The wolves and the bears will only view you as lunch.

AS THE WILDERNESS CREEPS BACK IN

It has now been several decades since the green destruction of American society began in full force. As they've set about destroying America's infrastructure of bridges, roads and dams, while banning hunting, gun ownership and property rights, the wilderness has begun to creep back in. Today, by man's own rules, the animals now have the advantage.

Here are some dispatches from the front lines of the timeless war between man and the predators who seek to kill him.

* Cougar populations from Texas to Canada are exploding

* Coyote population is increasing - Colorado alone reports 75,000 breeding adults and 200,000 juvenile pups

* Grizzly bears achieved full recovery in 1982 (yet they remain listed as endangered, primarily because the Fish and Wildlife service gets $25 million annually for their protection - Grizzlies are a profit center)

* The Elk population has increased by 1200% since 1907.

* Whitetail deer - 2700%

* Antelope - 3700% - since 1923

* Moose - 736% - since 1960

Well, those statistics certainly show successful wildlife recovery. So what has been man's reward for such unselfish dedication to other species?

In 1991, alone, animal damage control agencies have received 84,100 requests from "urban" residents for assistance.

92% of all rabies are found in wildlife. As the wildlife populations have increased, so have the cases of the deadly rabies disease. In fact, rabies has tripled since 1973 and it's now found in 43 states. In 1990, New York State reported 1761 cases of rabies and 1088 people were treated for rabies.

Lyme disease is also on the rise as a result of the exploding wildlife populations. In 1982 there were 500 reported cases while in 1994 the number soared by 2600% to 13,000 cases. Wolves in Wisconsin and Minnesota are infected with Lyme Disease and are helping to spread it.

The plague, which was responsible for wiping out almost one-half of the human population in Europe during the Middle Ages has been almost unheard of in North America - until now. Counties in Colorado and Montana are reporting an epidemic proportion of plague with more than 1900 cases reported, and it's moving North and East.

Warm and fuzzy Prairie dogs, which are first cousins to rats, are a prime source of rabies and plague as their populations explode under the protection of animal-rights activists.

Direct risk to human safety is increasing in towns and cities across the country as hunting and trapping are banned and wild predators lose their fear of man. It's no longer uncommon to see them walking the streets of residential neighborhoods.

In Denver, Colorado, pets, including small cats and dogs have been almost cleaned out by coyote attacks. Also in Colorado, between 1995 and 1996 there were 246 black-bear attacks and 127 mountain-lion attacks against people. The attacks have steadily increased since the banning of trapping and the spring bear hunt in that state.

In Los Angeles, California coyote attacks are on the rise. From 1975 through 1982 there was a total of 14 coyote attacks in residential areas. But in the suburban community of Oceanside, alone, in 1988 there were three separate attacks over a two-day period.

The cougar population in L.A. has tripled since the 1970's. California has reported more than 2600 cases of humans in danger from wild animals including attacks by 114 mountain lions, 18 black bears and 265 coyotes.

Since 1986 there have been nine cougar attacks in California - more than were recorded in the entire United States in the previous one hundred years. In February of this year a four-year-old girl was attacked by a coyote in Los Angeles.

The California office of the U.S. Department of Agriculture reports that its phones are ringing off the wall with reports of animal attacks in urban areas. As more and more states take up the animal-rights' and environmentalists' agenda to ban trapping the attacks are increasing.

Oregon reports 143 complaints of cougars threatening the lives of humans. Mountain lion have been found and removed from the city limits of Eugene, Grisham and Beaverton.

Utah reports three mountain lions from one subdivision in one day. Nevada found a lion in the town of Elko. Montana reports three to six cases every year.

From 1900 to 1990 you could count the number of people who were killed by mountain lions on a single hand. But there have been more killed in the last five years than in the previous one hundred.

Arizona reports eight black-bear attacks against humans. Benkelman, Nebraska reported in October, 1996, a coyote attack against a forty-year-old woman. In 1994, 603 people were treated for rabies in Texas.

Industries have also been heavily damaged by the increased predator populations. In 1994 farmers and ranchers lost 520,600 sheep to bear and wolf attacks. In 1995 117,400 cows were lost the same way.

Since the Clinton Administration came to power in 1992, under the direction of green zealots like Al Gore and Bruce Babbitt, the Agriculture Department no longer protects the farmers, but now works for the interest of wildlife.

The airline industry, too suffers from the exploding populations of birds, losing more than $1 billion annually. In 1996 passenger jets reports 2444 collisions with wild flocks. In Alaska a military AWAC jet crashed, killing all aboard when it collided with a flock of geese.

BEING EATEN IN THE GARDEN OF EDEN

As the attacks on humans mount, more and more states are making wildlife off limits by banning trapping and hunting - with more initiatives on the ballots every year.

The greens are now calling for the return of wolves to the Adirondacks and parts of Maine and New Hampshire. A New York Times editorial recently stated that, if research indicates wolves can be reintroduced in the Adirondacks they "should be given a warm welcome."

The White House is intensifying its efforts to designate American rivers as "heritage sites." That designation is nothing more than another hidden agenda for blocking man's development. The wild animals will have free reign over the river bed, right up to your door.

The EPA is tightening emission standards and clean air standards that will ban cars over four years old from the highways and destroy industries which can't possibly meet the unrealistic and unnecessary demands.

In December of this year the United States intends to sign the "Climate Change Protocol," another United Nations treaty that will force American technology to pull back to 1990 levels. The only effects of this treaty will be to destroy industry and raise energy costs to unprecedented levels. It has nothing to do with protecting the environment.

And so the march goes on, unabated, toward a new American wilderness, full of hungry predators and unarmed victims. Today, those future victims seem to eagerly await their fate, convinced of the romance of man and animal living together in some new garden of Eden.

The latest to paint the rosy picture of man in the wilderness is Steven Spielberg's "Lost World." Here, as vicious eating machines tear at the flesh of every human in sight, one of the heroes of the film is none other than a member of the radical environmental group Earth First!

As this moron defies logic by caring for a baby T-Rex, bringing the monstrous adult dinosaurs after them, he endangers the entire human camp. Eventually his "Earth First" stupidity endangers all of San Diego, as he pontificates about the "second worst predator on earth - Man."

The movie ends with the romantic, noble and feel-good message that, "if we just leave the animals alone, life will find a way." But does that include human life?

This insane hatred of anything human is at the very root of the radical environmental agenda that is driving America to become a renewed wilderness. Reed Noss, one of the authors of "The Wildlands Project" - the basis for the reshaping of America - has said, "most conservation biologists agree that compatible human uses of the landscape must be considered... however, the native ecosystem and the collective needs of non-human species must take precedence over the needs and desires of humans."

Do you embrace the new world being created for you? Do you eagerly await your chance to commune with wild predators in your front yard? Do you think that unproven and theorized environmental disasters are legitimate reasons to ignore American rights of property ownership? Do you think that such zealots have the right to radically restructure our entire society to their own crazy image without proven science?

If so, then it is your duty to also understand the consequences of your actions. You need to understand that in your brave new world you will be denied the option of self defense or of protecting your children. You will condemn the elderly and the sick to do without air conditioning. Your food will not be disease-free or kept safe in the refrigerator. You will not own a single-family home. Transportation will not be readily available. Perhaps the opportunity to visit relatives on the other side of the country will be denied as airplanes become an environmental hazard.

Freedom of choice will be sacrificed for the "common environmental good." Above all, elected governments will go the way of the T-Rex, as Non-Governmental Organizations (NGO's) like Earth First and the Sierra Club make our decisions for us (it's in the Biodiversity Treaty, look it up).

And keep in mind the scene from "Lost World" where the group of humans are running across a field, defenseless, as they are picked off by packs of Raptors. In the demented new reinstituted wilderness of Sustainable Development, it won't be extinct dinosaurs that are ripping at the flesh of your children, but Grizzlies and wolves and cougars and coyotes.

The wilderness has already begun to creep back into your neighborhood. Wild predators are now walking the streets as a direct result of radical environmental policies. Those living on the front lines, the latest crop of victims to the Earth First vision, will tell you the feeding frenzy has already begun in many American cities.

Prepare yourself. Soon, you too will hear the cry of the wolf to the new corn moon. What will you do?

Effective Lobbying

by Ron Culver

Taking the time to send email to 'Congress Critters' is an extreme waste of time - to say the least. As a system administrator intimately familiar with all the tricks... let me tell you the facts.

First, virtually all email sent to both houses of congress is sent to the 'bit-bucket' - in other words it is simply deleted - after an auto-responder program extracts your email address to send a canned response to you. Less than 5% of the members of congress even have a listed email address, and none of them have staffers who pull email on a regular basis to actually read it and do anything with it. Yes, some is 'sampled.'

It gets worse... Congress makes no real effort to give the public a voice via email - or 'snail-mail' for that matter. Why, every member receives between 8 to 20 thousand pieces of communication every month - depending on what they... and often TV and talk radio, are doing.

It is physically impossible for the Representative to process all of this material themselves - so all of it goes through various processes, with a majority of it getting dumped.

Sometimes, when they feel insecure, they may 'sample' a small amount of it when their staff lets them know there is 'heat' on a particular piece of legislation.

Rarely will any Rep. actually sit down and respond in writing themselves to any letter not from persons deemed highly important or influential - even these are usually delegated to staff which most often sends a canned response with respect to any legislation you may mention.

Your views are far more likely to be noticed by your representative if you write a letter to the editor of one of the larger print publications in the US, and mention the representative by name - in context with what they did or did not do re. some piece of legislation. That gets their attention, guaranteed - but it is usually 'after the fact' and worthless in terms of influencing pending action... and, this is an uncertain means of influencing your, and other representatives, to say the least.

How then can you influence the actions of congress members - if you are dedicated to doing so? It is expensive, but it works better than sending email - and regular mail...you have to call their offices - not once in a while, but regularly. You have to establish who the various staff members are and what they do - know the reps chief of staff by name, and ask to speak to them.

Get to know them and call them often. Keep notes on your contacts, what they say and refer to them when you are talking to them. When you have an issue to contend with, ask them to FAX you a statement regarding the reps stance on the issue, then fax a copy to as many talk radio hosts as you can find that would be interested in supporting or opposing the stance of the legislator. Specifically, be blunt in assertions that you can not support, or will support the re-election of the rep if.... and be able to read back from your notes all the reasons why.

Documentation of calls is vital to making headway - it doesn't take long to build real power when staffers know you document and share the content of communications with many others, particularly various organizations that can help - or hurt them.

Lastly, send email to: comments@mail.house.gov and webmaster@scc.senate.gov and tell them you want to see an honest effort made to allow you to voice your opinion on legislation and issues of importance - to all representatives - not just a few.

Do not swallow the drivel that you must communicate with only your district representative, tell them the actions of all members directly effect you and you have a right to be heard by all of them. Best Wishes,
Ron Culver

Philosopher Thomas Hobbes believed that society would benefit most if the land were owned by the sovereign who had the authority to distribute the land to those best suited to use it for the benefit of society, and "no individual can set their own private judgment of right and wrong in opposition to the sovereign's commands."

John Locke, on the other hand, believed that society would benefit most if the land were owned by its first possessor, who had the authority to use the land to benefit himself. Society, consisting of individuals who owned their own land and were free to use it for their own benefit, would, therefore, take care of themselves.

At the core of all land use battles, the conflict between these two fundamental views of land ownership continues to rage.

In America, it took a revolution to convince King George that Thomas Hobbes had no influence. While few Americans knew anything about John Locke, they knew all they needed to know about the ownership by first possession. Trespassers were not prosecuted, they were shot. Water rights were inviolate and resources "under, on, and above the land" belonged to the landowner. The property rights which accompanied ownership by first possession were absolute, unquestioned, and enforced.

When the exercise of those absolute rights infringed the absolute rights of a neighbor, the dispute was often resolved in the graveyard. But as communities developed, more civilized methods of dispute resolution evolved. Communities devised methods of recognizing and recording the transfer of property. Some early communities even devised methods of restricting land use on privately owned property.

Nevertheless, through the early years of the evolution of property rights in America, the fundamental Lockean concept of individual, absolute ownership prevailed.

The U.S. Constitution enshrined that concept and required the federal government to pay "just compensation" when it took property from private citizens.

The Lockean concept of property rights has almost vanished from American reality. Local zoning ordinances imposed by local elected officials was widely accepted (except in Houston which seems to have survived without it) across the land. In the 1970s, the idea of regional planning (zoning) by transboundary, or state authorities became popular. Then federal land use planning became the rage until Congress defeated the effort - twice. The Hobbesian concept did not die with the Federal Land Use Planning Act. It retreated only to retrench, redesign itself, and return in the form of "environmental" regulations.

Moreover, the courts seem to have studied under Hobbes. To most Americans, a property is "taken" by the government when the owner cannot use his property as he wishes because of a government regulation. Not so in many courts. The reasoning is hard to follow and even harder to swallow.

If a property is "taken" to benefit society, then the government should pay just compensation to the owner. If, however, the property is "taken" to prevent "harm" to society, then the government has no liability to pay.

What, then is "harm"?

Until recently, harm, also referred to as nuisance, was considered to be an activity that would have a negative impact upon people, especially those people who were directly impacted by the activity. A junk yard in a residential neighborhood, for example, would be considered a harm, or nuisance, to the other people in the neighborhood and could therefore be prevented by government without the government having to pay just compensation.

The definition of "harm" began to expand with the judicial gerrymandering of the Clean Water Act. Section 404 was intended to give the Corps of Engineers the authority to prevent the pollution of the "navigable waters of the United States." Law suits brought by the National Wildlife Federation stretched, distorted, and expanded the meaning of the law so badly that Ocie Mills spent 21 months in a federal prison for polluting the waters of the United States when he deposited 19 loads of building sand on his own property — after getting a building permit from his county and having his site approved by the state of Florida. With the expansion of the Clean Water Act, nearly 200-million acres of private property came under the jurisdiction of the federal government. Use of that land is restricted and no compensation is due the owner because use of what the government declares to be a wetland is considered a "harm" to society.

No longer does an alleged "harm" have to directly impact people. The wetland policy has been accepted and government does not even have to prove that society will actually be harmed by a proposed wetland use. Government has only to declare a property to be a wetland and its use is restricted without compensation.

The Endangered Species Act further expanded the concept of "harm." This law allows the government to restrict land use when the proposed use may interfere with the activities of an animal the government has declared to be endangered or threatened. The concept of "harm" is no longer limited to harming people. Animals and plants now take precedence over the property rights of a landowner.

These two laws, the Clean Water Act and the Endangered Species Act, have given the federal government more authority to control land use than would have been conveyed by the Federal Land Use Planning Act which failed in the 1970s.

But it gets worse — much worse. The Wild and Scenic Rivers Act gives the federal government authority to control land use on either side of designated rivers. The Department of Transportation's Scenic Byways program can control land use on all the private property that can be seen from a designated highway. Heritage areas are popping up all over the country in which land use is restricted for every conceivable purpose which is defined as "harm" and therefore not compensable.

Additionally, there are 47 Biosphere Reserves in America in which land use is restricted by international agreement. The U.S. State Department's Man and the Biosphere Program is funding private organizations working to nominate additional Biosphere Reserves.

The federal government has control of the land now, and it is tightening its grip. Two international treaties are hovering on the horizon that will, if ratified by the Senate, end any resemblance to private property rights as they have been known for 200 years in America.

Warren Christopher, Secretary of State, announced on April 9 at Stanford University, that ratification of the Convention on Biological Diversity would be a top priority for President Clinton's second term. Close on its heels will be the Convention on Desertification. These two treaties will require that the federal government implement land use policies that comply with international law.

Article 8 of the Convention on Biological Diversity requires the establishment of a "system of protected areas." The treaty does not define what a system of protected areas might be. The treaty also requires a global biodiversity assessment. The assessment has been prepared and published by Cambridge University Press. It is an 1140-page document entitled Global Biodiversity Assessment (GBA), in which a system of protected areas is thoroughly defined in the last 200 pages. The ideal system of protected areas is said to be The Wildlands Project, published in 1992 in the United States (GBA, p. 993).

The Wildlands Project calls for at least 50 percent of the land area of North America to be converted to wilderness, off limits to humans. An additional 25 percent of the land area is to be buffer zones in which only limited human activity may occur with the approval of government.

Humans are to be resettled into the remaining 25 percent of the land area in what is called "sustainable communities." The time table for implementation is 50 to 100 years. The process has already begun.

Obviously, private property rights, as evolved from the Lockean concept of first possession, cannot survive the onslaught of Hobbesian philosophy being implemented by the federal government. The fledgling property rights movement in America was able to prevent the ratification of the Convention on Biological Diversity in the 103rd Congress, and to prevent the last four Biosphere Reserves nominated in America, but those were only temporary setbacks for those who want a sovereign government to control all land use.

A New Strategy

A new strategy has been devised by the proponents of The Wildlands Project. In the Winter 1995/96 edition of Wild Earth (the magazine which first published The Wildlands Project in 1992), proponents are told that the idea of property rights is too powerful to confront head-on. Instead, proponents should support the idea of property rights and advocate the payment of just compensation when property is taken to benefit society — but not when it is taken to prevent "harm" to society.

Publicly, The Wildlands Project proponents would be in agreement with property rights advocates. But behind the scenes, the definition of "harm" continues to expand. Now, thanks to a Wisconsin court decision, Just v. Marinette County, "harm" has been expanded beyond harm to people and harm to animals and plants, and now embraces the integrity of the ecosystem.

The decision holds that "An owner of land has no absolute and unlimited right to change the essential natural character of his land so as to use it for a purpose for which it was unsuited in its natural state."

Under this expansive concept of "harm," the federal government can prevent any and all activity by simply alleging that such activity will alter the integrity of the ecosystem. How can a landowner prove that a proposed, unperformed activity will not "harm" an ecosystem? Wild Earth readers are told: "What counts ultimately is not whose name is on the deed, but how the land is put to use, and who makes the land-use decisions."

Federal land use control is almost complete. Many people, perhaps the majority of Americans, sincerely believe that the environment and society will benefit from the Hobbesian philosophy of government control of the land. The majority of people already live in cities and have little contact with the reality of land ownership. Many people have bought into the idea that the land and the biodiversity it contains really should be "public property," under the control of the government. There is a much more important principle at stake, however. If the federal government can circumvent the Constitution and take control over the privately owned land, what is to prevent that government from taking control over any other privately owned property?

The only protection from the exercise of sovereignty by the government over its people is the exercise of sovereignty by the people over the government. Before there was a Constitution, people exercised their sovereignty with bullets. The U.S. Constitution made it possible for people to exercise their sovereignty with ballots. Once the Hobbesian philosophy of the Convention on Biological Diversity is ratified by the U.S. Senate, both individual and national sovereignty will be ceded to an international body beyond the reach of ballots or bullets.

- Did a judge abuse you in Court?
- Did a Policeman wrongfully ticket you ?
- Did the Mayor violate his oath of office ?
- Were you wrongfully incarcerated by any official?
- Has any official violated the Constitution(s)?

Advocates for HONEST, ETHICAL, LEGAL PRACTICE - Texas (H.E.L.P.) has perfected what has been fondly referred to as a "BUREAUCRAT ASSAULT PACKAGE". H.E.L.P. is a volunteer citizen grass roots legal reform and government oversight organization. H.E.L.P. was formed for the single purpose in 1992 of fighting corruption of the legal system of Texas. H.E.L.P. has since expanded to fight government corruption at any and every level.

It makes no difference what State you live in. It makes no difference whether the official you are targeting is Federal State, County, Municipal, School Park, Airport, Police, Sheriff, Prison, etc. ANY PUBLIC OFFICIAL anywhere is a sitting duck for our "Assault Package".

H.E.L.P. first devised and utilized the Bureaucrat Assault Package to throw a corrupt Texas State District Judge off the bench. The judge had spent the most money in the history of Texas to retain her State District bench. She was the two term (8 years) incumbent, was endorsed by all major T.V. networks, and the only daily newspaper in Houston. She spent over FIVE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS ($500,000.00) in an effort to retain her bench in the election of November, 1996.

H.E.L.P. spent less than $2,000.00 and the efforts of a dozen volunteers, starting three (3) days before the election. We utilized what is referred to by the Military as "saturation carpet bombing". We proved that a handful of dedicated citizen volunteers, "working smart" can rid the system of any corrupt official no matter how powerful, no matter how much money they spend. H.E.L.P. has created the "Bureaucrat Assault Package", with the exact materials used in our campaign against this corrupt judge. DON'T FILE YOUR TAXES UNTIL YOU READ THIS BOOK!

VULTURES IN EAGLE'S CLOTHING

is an impeccably researched book based upon truth and law. It is a poignant expose of the Internal Revenue Service' most closely guarded secrets.

This one book proves that, according to rulings of the Supreme Court, that have never been overturned, "If you are a American Citizen, living and working within one of the 50 American states, freely exercising your fundamental constitutional Right to Labor in a common occupation, the graduated income tax is NOT applicable to you!"

That is why there is NO LAW within the entire Internal Revenue Code making a citizen living and working in one of the 50 states "subject to", "liable for", or "required to" pay the graduated income tax. The tax must be and is voluntary.

Voluntary means 1) given freely without compulsion, 2) having the power of free choice — Webster's Dictionary.

VULTURES IN EAGLE'S CLOTHING contains the inspiring stories of intelligent and enlightened citizens who followed the proper legal procedure for volunteering out of the tax system. These are Americans who have stood up to the IRS and WON! They stopped the IRS's misapplication of the law in its tracks! These citizens have received letters from the IRS saying: "You are no longer required to file a 1040 form."

The IRS is powerless against these individuals! "Former I.R.S. Commissioner Roscoe Egger resigned in April of 1986 after publicly admitting that 35 million Americans no longer file personal income taxes!" Financial Survival, Issue 1, 1990.

Learn the truth and the truth shall set you free!

"OUR TAX SYSTEM IS BASED UPON VOLUNTARY ASSESSMENT AND PAYMENT AND NOT UPON DISTRRAINT" Flora v. U.S., 362 U.S. 145

VULTURES IN EAGLE'S CLOTHING teaches the legal procedures other Americans have used to unvolunteer and:

- Permanently STOP paying Income Taxes!
- Permanently STOP employers from withholding payroll taxes!
- Lawfully get 100% of their taxes paid refunded for the past three years!
- Lawfully exercise the right to NOT produce books and records for the IRS!
